British collector snaps up Dürer print for €430,000 in Berlin

Pick of the week

A lifetime impression of The Fall of Man (Adam and Eve) – perhaps Albrecht Dürer's (1471-1528) best-known engraving – has sold for a record €430,000 (£390,000) in Germany. The buyer was a British collector.

A towering achievement of northern Renaissance printmaking now overfamiliar from numerous reproductions, Adam and Eve was made in 1504 as something of a 'calling card' ahead of Dürer's second visit to Venice.

He took an unusual amount of care in its creation and chose to sign it boldly with his full name and birthplace.

A tablet hanging from the mountain ash branch that Adam holds in his right hand reads Albert Dvrer Noricvs Faciebat 1504.

New digital catalogue raisonné shows scholars the way ahead

by Laura Chesters

Art dealer Peter Nahum has created a free-to-access digital catalogue raisonné for the Victorian painter Edward Coley Burne-Jones (1833–98).

With help from academics, Peter and Renate Nahum have spent three years and more than £90,000 to begin the process of cataloguing the output of the prolific Pre-Raphaelite artist. Usually catalogue raisonnés are worked on by one or two scholars, take decades to complete and ae published in print.

An organic project

However, Nahum decided he wanted to create a collaborative, organic and online project for Burne-Jones rather than the traditional method.

Currently the website holds 3500 items with more than 7500 images – about 25% of the total works that the artist, his studio and collaborators produced. It is being worked on continuously and will take many years to 'complete'.

Nahum said: "We are trying to lay down the foundations for future scholars to dig into. This is a collaborative effort. Many scholars have different opinions but we all need to work together. Dealers and academics must come together and constructive criticism will help us to develop this."

Nahum created the website having worked as a dealer since acquiring the name of The Leicester Galleries in 1984 following 17 years at Sotheby's. He was a specialist on BBC's Antiques Roadshow for many years.

The initiative is in honour of two scholars – the late John Christian and William Waters – who Nahum said

WOOLLEY'S LIVE

Burne-Jones catalogue raisonné launches online

"have dedicated their lives to the artist".

Waters is among the academics working on the project with the Nahums alongside Alison Smith, Suzanne Fagence Cooper and Fiona Mann.

London dealer Rupert Maas is also collaborating with Nahum and is a trustee of the project which is now a registered charity.

Having funded the first part of the project personally, the Nahums hope to raise further funds for the charity to continue "to pay the scholars and for the programming on the site".

A fee of £160 will be charged to submit works to be considered for authentication, which Nahum said is "modest in comparison to other catalogue raisonnés".

Left: Head of May Morris by Sir Edward Coley Burne-Jones. The 8½ x 6¾in (21 x 17cm) pencil drawing is one of a group of works by Burne-Jones being offered by The Maas Gallery and has an asking price of £65,000. It came from a UK private collection and has been certified by the Burne-Jones Catalogue Raisonné.

Nahum is aware of the many issues raised by the nature of the project, particularly relating to Burne-Jones and his studio. He said: "This is a very serious and difficult undertaking. Burne-Jones employed two permanent studio assistants, Charles Fairfax Murray and Thomas Matthews Rooke and there may have been up to seven assistants at any one time. These assistants were not idle, so one must assume that the majority of Burne-Jones' final works have some percentage of studio painting in them."

Studio system

Maas added: "Burne-Jones had a prodigious output and was unique among British Victorian artists that he operated a studio system so it is difficult to tell when Burne-Jones ends and an assistant begins."

The issue of getting scholars to agree what is by the hand of Burne-Jones or an assistant is one reason a catalogue raisonné of the artist had not been created before. Undertakings such as this can require decades of study. Nahum points out that for fellow Victorian artist William Holman Hunt (1827-1910) a catalogue raisonné took 30 years, for Sir John Everett Millais (1829-1896) it was 40 years and for Ford Madox Brown (1821-93) it took 50 years.

Nahum and Maas have great hopes for the project. However, Maas highlighted the reaction by the wider world may not be completely straightforward.

He said: "There should never be one person responsible for determining if something is right or not. But because it is an initiative led by dealers, academia may find it unusual and might not take to it quickly."

The catalogue can be viewed at eb-j.org

Overseas buyer for Armada maps unless £600,000 is found

A public campaign to keep rare maps of the Spanish Armada in the country will be needed to raise the required £600,000, writes Laura Chesters.

The 10 hand-drawn maps are the only known contemporary drawings of the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588 and have been temporarily prevented from being exported on the advice of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art and Objects of Cultural Interest (RCEWA).

A number of candidates have already ruled themselves out of the running. The British Library cannot raise funds to buy them as it is an expert adviser in the export licence application process. The Royal Museums Greenwich has also said it is not planning to fundraise.

A statement from Art Fund said: "To ensure these rare maps are saved for the nation, a UK third party such as a museum, library or university collection, would need to raise the funds.

"The funding environment is of course currently exceptionally challenging as the cultural and heritage sectors work hard to survive and adapt in the aftermath of Covid-19. Government bodies, trusts and foundations have traditionally played an important role in supporting such campaigns.

Left: a detail of one of the 10 hand-drawn Spanish Armada maps for which a buyer in the UK will need to raise £600,000 (plus VAT) by October 9.

"Art Fund is known for such campaigns to save art for public display in the UK; when asked to contribute, the general public tends to be exceptionally generous and we always stand ready to talk with museums."

The maps, drawn by an unknown draughtsman, possibly from the Netherlands, relate to the most famous images of the conflict – a series of engravings completed in 1590 by Augustine Ryther.

The original drawings by surveyor of the Queen's Works and military engineer Robert Adams (d.1595) which were used by Ryther have been lost. However, it is believed this collection of maps are near-contemporary copies.

RCEWA committee member Peter Barber said: "Robert Adams was one of the most skilled cartographic draughtsmen of Elizabethan England.

"These drawings are as close as one is ever likely to get, in the absence of the originals, to the appearance of Adams' manuscript maps.

"The drawings need to be saved for the nation so that the full story behind the creation of these iconic images can be properly researched."

The maps had been owned by William Waldorf Astor (1848-1919) and inherited by his family. Dealer Daniel Crouch recently agreed to sell the maps to an overseas buyer who applied for the export licence.

Picking over the bones of £78,000 skeleton clock bidding

This exhibition-quality skeleton clock, made by Anglo-German clockmaking firm Camerer Kuss & Co to celebrate Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee, sold for £78,000 at Bonhams on July 15.

Camerer Kuss had used an image of the 2ft 5in (80cm) timekeeper on an 1897 calendar, and it took pride of place in the shop window at 56 New Oxford Street, London.

Prince Albert had died 36 years earlier but, in tune with the gothic framework, he and Victoria are shown as a chivalric young couple in quasi-medieval style clothing.

Remote winding

As well as quarter chiming, announced via a choice of Westminster chimes on gongs hidden in the walnut base and bells mounted behind the royal couple, the movement features a remote winding and hand-setting function. Together these overcame the need to remove the glass dome 52 times a year in order to wind the clock (the reason that, following accidental damage, so many 19th century skeleton clocks are now lacking their domes).

It came for sale in Bonhams' Fine Clocks auction in London on July 15, with its perfectly fitting original dome, from a family that had owned it for more than 70 years. Estimated at £10,000-15,000, it topped the sale with a bid that, once the 27.5/25% buyer's premium was added reached £97,562.

Four salerooms, One $420m sale for Christie's

by Alex Capon

Far left: Roy Lichtenstein's Nude with Joyous Painting from 1994. Knocked down at $40.5m (£32.2m), it was the top lot at Christie's sale titled One: A Global Sale of the 20th Century.

Christie's first 'relay-style' auction, an event with four auctioneers in different countries each conducting a section of the sale, raised a total of $420.9m (£334.9m) including premium.

With the venues linked up via live streaming, 75 of the 80 lots of Modern and Contemporary art sold (94%), although almost half the lots carried a guarantee from either the auction house or a third party, meaning they were always bound to sell.

The auction on July 10 was branded 'One: a Global Sale of the 20th Century'. It began in Hong Kong with Elaine Kwok of Christie's Asia on the rostrum, before moving to Paris where Cécile Verdier, president of Christie's France, conducted proceedings. It then transferred to London where Christie's global president Jussi Pylkkänen hosted the third stage of the event and then the baton was passed finally to Adrien Meyer, Christie's global head of private sales and co-chairman of Impressionist & Modern Art, in New York.

With each auctioneer working in their local currency, the sale took four hours to complete. Although some bidders could attend in the rooms (Christie's said all social distancing and locally required conditions were observed including temperature checks and health declaration forms in Hong Kong), bidding came primarily on the phone and internet.

The sale was led by a late work by Roy Lichtenstein (1923-97), Nude with Joyous Painting from 1994, which was included in the New York section of the auction.

Offered with an estimate in excess of $30m, it was knocked down at $40.5m (£32.2m).

The auction generated some significant sales which suggested that the top end of the art market remains afloat, including 13 records for individual artists.

However, the overall 'One' auction total combined with the accompanying $30.9m day sale represented under half of the $1.07bn (£830.2m) raised from Christie's New York sales in the same category in May 2019.

Partridge evolves from 'too big' sales to specialist events

Auction house Adam Partridge is to remodel its calendar, moving away from large multi-discipline sales in favour of more frequent specialised events, writes Roland Arkell.

From the autumn, the 10-year-old firm, with salerooms in both Macclesfield and Liverpool and offices in Preston, Altrincham and Torquay, will mix quarterly smaller specialist auctions with quarterly sales titled Furniture & Interiors.

"In recent months we have taken the opportunity to reconfigure our calendar," Adam Partridge told ATG.

"Growing to three and four days, some of the 'old school' sales were becoming too big and were proving hard to manage logistically."

The four-day, 2700-lot sale held in Macclesfield on May 26-29 was among the largest art and antiques auctions staged during the UK's lockdown attracting a record number of registered bidders – some 5016 in total.

Stand out lots

Partridge added that "these smaller sales will allow entries to stand out that much more – and they reflect the extra work the new offices are bringing in".

A high street office in Torquay, where the firm has a representative, is scheduled to open in the near future.

The firm will continue to hold traditional-style sales across two days if necessary (the next Furniture & Interiors sale will be on July 29-30) but Partridge anticipates its specialist events will be one-day sales of between 500-800 lots.

The 'trial' calendar for the rest of the year includes, in Macclesfield, sales of Silver, Jewellery & Watches (September 4), Militaria, Sporting, Toys, Wines & Spirits (September 11), The Leonard and Alison Shurz Collection of Studio Ceramics (October 8-9) and Northern & Contemporary Art, Decorative Arts & Design (October 23).

Left: silver and enamel necklaces plus hand-drawn designs from the Charles Horner factory. Estimates range from £50-300 as part of a September 4 sale of Silver, Jewellery & Watches at Adam Partridge.

Highlights include a single owner collection of Charles Horner silver and the medals and personal effects of David Hayden (b.1979), the first RAF non-commissioned officer to win the Military Cross.

Sales in Liverpool will continue as Antiques & Collector's auctions with specialist sections devoted to collecting areas such as Rock & Pop, Asian art and Maritime antiques.

Until government guidelines on public gatherings are eased, all auctions will be primarily online-based, live-streamed events with phone bidding available.

Welsh auction houses must wait to fully reopen – but online trading continues

Although auction house premises in England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Ireland can (under restrictions) be open to the public, the official green light is yet to be received in Wales.

Dealers were able to reopen in Wales on June 22. However, auction houses remain on the list of businesses yet to fully reopen.

A Welsh Government spokesperson told ATG discussions on how to "lower the risk of the transmission of coronavirus" in auction houses will "inform the Welsh Government's considerations in preparation for the next review of the coronavirus regulations on July 30".

Many Welsh auction houses have, in various formats, continued to trade across the lockdown ahead of the official reopening hoped for later this summer.

Rogers Jones in Cardiff and Colwyn Bay has been open to the public by pre-arranged appointment-only with bidding conducted online-only.

Auctioneer Ben Rogers Jones said: "When visitors arrive there is social distancing and hygiene measures in place. There is no bidding in the room for the time being, only internet bidding. With this system employed I feel that we are safer than the retail sector which is open in Wales.

"The health of our team and clients comes first, and so there is no urgency as far as we are concerned to return to either room bidding, or unannounced visits."

Peter Francis in Carmarthen has also been operating under strict guidelines.

Nigel Hodson, managing principal at Peter Francis, said: "We opened three weeks ago when other non-essential retail businesses were allowed to open. We are behind locked doors with all visits, including viewing of sales strictly by appointment, with social distancing and numbers very limited.

"The auctions are online-only with commission and phone bidding also available. Collection of lots is also by appointment and buyers are not allowed in the saleroom with items moved to the loading bay.

"We must all be sensible and keep safe, looking forward to a busy and stimulating future."

‘Superbly preserved’ Dürer bears fruit

The original 10 x 7½in (25 x 19cm) copper engravings from this period are the most admired – and not just for reasons of art historical snobbery. Printing blocks or plates wear quickly, causing lines to lose their depth and hold less ink, so the earlier the Old Master print, the closer it will be to what the artist intended.

Dürer’s engravings have been studied, copied and adored for the better part of 500 years. Most will today be catalogued with a reference to Joseph Meder whose detailed catalogue raisonné, published in 1932, did much to categorise the artist’s prints by state and sub-state.

The example of Adam and Eve offered by Grisebach in Berlin on July 9 is the third state (or Meder 3a) made within the artist’s lifetime. The paper includes the large bull’s head watermark common to most Dürer prints made before c.1520.

This copy was described as superbly preserved with a strong, clear and rich image.

Once part of the collection of Friedrich Quiring (b.1886) of Eberswalde, it came for sale from a vendor whose descendant had bought it from Düsseldorf prints and drawings dealership CG Boerner in 1960.

A number of lifetime copies of Adam and Eve (Meder 3a and Meder 2a) have previously sold for prices north of £100,000. However, this one, estimated at €80,000-120,000, sold at €430,000 (£390,000) or €537,500 including 25% buyer’s premium.

According to Artprice.com, this represents a new high for a copy of the print, exceeding two sold at Christie’s in the last decade: one for $550,000 (£349,500) in New York (January 2013) and another at £340,000 in London (July 2011).

It also stands as the second-highest sum at auction for any Dürer print, only behind a copy of his famous 1515 woodcut The Rhinoceros that fetched $720,000 (£457,550) again in January 2013 in New York.

At Grisebach, the same British buyer successfully bid €255,000 (£231,800) for a fine example of Dürer’s Melencolia I of 1514 (Meder 2a) that had been in a German private collection for over 80 years.

Frieze cancelled but will run online

Frieze London and Frieze Masters fairs have been cancelled this year due to the ongoing issues relating to the coronavirus, including complications around travel quarantine and continued restrictions.

The events in Regent’s Park, London, had been scheduled for October 2020 and instead will be held next in 2021.

This year, Frieze will stage an online version of the fair with a Frieze viewing room scheduled for October 8-11, the original dates of the event. Organisers staged the first Frieze viewing room in May for the New York fair when that event was also cancelled.

Eye of the Collector fair moves to 2021

The inaugural Eye of the Collector fair in London has been postponed until 2021 due to the coronavirus.

The organiser, Nazy Vassegh, originally delayed the event back from May until September this year and had held an online viewing room on May 12-31. Now the event has been moved until next year and Vassegh, who previously ran Masterpiece London, will organise a series of online editions of Eye of the Collector comprising viewing rooms and digital events until the physical fair next year.

Coinex postponed until next year

The Coinex fair, set to run in September, has also been postponed until next year.

The event runs in Mayfair’s Millennium Hotel and usually hosts around 100 organisations from the British Numismatic Trade Association and beyond.

Coinex organisers said the next event is planned for September 2021. However, it is currently considering holding a smaller, one-day event ahead of this date and will make an announcement in due course.

Marketing chief leaves Christie’s

Christie’s global chief marketing officer Amy Wexler is to leave on September 1 after two decades at the auction house.

Right: Amy Wexler is leaving Christie’s.

Wexler took over the CMO role in 2018 from Marc Sands, who joined as chief marketing officer in April 2014. He later joined Bonhams. When Wexler was promoted in 2018, colleague Matthew Rubinger became deputy chief marketing officer. The new marketing structure has yet to be finalised.

Bonhams boosts German team

Bonhams has appointed Eva Lengler as the company’s representative for the northern part of Germany, based in Düsseldorf.

Charity auctions support the NHS

Auction houses did their bit for charity during lockdown – regional UK salerooms (mainly for NHS related causes) raised at least £355,597 during the period. According to figures compiled by ATG, among the top fundraisers were Omega Auctions, which held a charity music auction in association with Island Records and raised £181,755. Singer Billy Porter was the auctioneer of The One Love sale. No buyer’s premium or vendor charges were made so 100% of the proceeds from the sales were split between NHS Charities Together Covid 19 Appeal and Feeding America. Among the highlights was a set of U2 lyrics sold for £76,000.

Other top fundraisers from the UK included Dix Noonan Webb, raising £39,815, and Cheffins which chalked up £30,610.

Separately, Dawsons is holding a drumming memorabilia charity auction on July 18 with the related drumming initiative already raised more than £30,000 ahead of the sale.

Lights, camera, auction action

German saleroom Auktionshaus Lankes has come up with an innovative solution to hold a live sale at a time when Covid-19 restrictions in Bavaria are still stringent: a drive-in cinema experience.

Just 10 spots at individual tables can be booked in the auction room for the summer sale in Döhlau but thanks to a 6 x 3m LED screen set up in the adjacent Lankes car park 50 spaces are on offer, where bidders can take part in the auction in or on their vehicle. Bidders will be equipped with special buzzers to indicate bids.

The auction, to be run by the toys specialist from July 21-25, is held also via Lot-tissimo for online bidding.

British Airways puts art up for sale

Seventeen works from the collection of British Airways will be offered across two Sotheby's auctions in London this month as the airline seeks to raise cash after its business was badly hit by the coronavirus.

This selection of paintings, prints and works on paper by artists such as Bridget Riley, Patrick Heron, Terry Frost and Marc Quinn is expected to raise around £1.5m in total.

The chief lot in the consignment is Riley's Cool Edge, a trademark stripe painting from 1982 which had previously hung in a members' lounge at Heathrow Terminal 5.

The relatively large 4ft 8in x 4ft (1.42 x 1.21m) oil on linen was part of the artist's 'Egyptian Series' for which she adopted a palette derived from those used in ancient Egyptian tomb paintings. It has an £800,000-1.2m estimate at the Rembrandt to Richter evening auction on July 28.

Transatlantic rook flies

As implied by an extensive inscription, this souvenir chess piece was produced by Carlo Joseph and Arthur Alphonse Giuliano, sons of the celebrated Italian artist jeweller Carlo Giuliano, to commemorate a chess match played via telegraph in 1897.

To mark the completion of the Trans-Atlantic telegraph, a game began on May 31, 1897, between teams of five players each from the House of Commons in London and the House of Representatives in Washington. After moves were relayed back and forth for two days, the match was drawn with each side scoring 2.5 points.

Standing 3in (7.5cm) high, the gilt bronze 'rook' is set to the top with a section of the telegraph wire laid by the Anglo-American Telegraph Co of London and the Western Union Telegraph Co of New York. It is signed C&AG to the base.

A number of these souvenirs were produced at the time and they occasionally appear for sale, appealing to both chess collectors and admirers of the Giulianos. This one, offered at Mallams' sale of Jewellery, Watches & Silver in Oxford on July 2, sold at £3600 (plus buyer's premium).

On the right track

The Hornby train set is 100 years old this year. Tom Derbyshire reports on the sale of a remarkable century-old survivor plus other toys and collectable highlights from across the UK regions

A century ago, the Meccano Company released its first pre-constructed clockwork train set under a new brand name: Hornby.

In 1901, Frank Hornby, a clerk from Liverpool, had founded Meccano, selling construction kits that taught children the basic principles of mechanical engineering. One of the most popular projects was to make trains, and gradually Meccano began to produce specific train parts, such as chimneys and boilers, to make its models more realistic.

The 1920 train set was a breakthrough, with much more realistic and accurate parts, although it was still essentially a kit made with the typical Meccano nut and bolt construction. The box claimed that the train was built of standardised parts to allow for modification: it did, but only identical parts of different colours were interchangable.

Subsequent train sets released by Hornby switched to the 'slot and tab' method of construction employed by other makers of tin toys, and Hornby no longer sold their trains as 'kits'.

A remarkably preserved example of one of these first train sets emerged at North Yorkshire auction house Tennants (20% buyer's premium) on June 10, estimated at £400-600. The seller was a private client in the north who had brought it to a valuation day.

The maroon locomotive has M Ltd (Meccano Limited Liverpool) decals to the sides and Hornby stamped on the front. The wagon is marked MR (Midland Railway), one of the railway companies operating in the UK before the 'Big Four' (London North East Railway, London, Midland and Scottish, Great Western Railway and Southern Railway) were created in 1923.

Tennants specialist Kegan Harrison said: "It really was in fantastic, original condition. The clockwork key was still in its packet, and the original packing slip, which is dated 11-20, was still with the box. I have never seen an example like this."

It sold for £2600 to a 'major private collector' from the south of England.

With most Hornby 0-gauge surprisingly very affordable, it is condition, date and rarity that make the difference to value.

> The clockwork key is still in its packet, and the original packing slip, dated 11-20, is still with the box

A good example of how rarity can boost demand came at Special Auction Services (25% buyer's premium) on June 30-July 1, during one of the Newbury firm's extensive dedicated sales dubbed Glorious Trains. Estimated at £500-800, a No 2 Special E26 electric 4-4-2 tank locomotive sold for £1000 to a UK private collector.

The markings SAS to the left side and SAR to right on the lined black livery give the game away: this was a South African export model, featuring an early Hornby Series 6027 number roundel.

The saleroom's specialist Hugo Marsh said: "It came from a classic hidden collection. We were called to a semi-detached house in Surrey for 'a small train collection' and in the end filled four vans. An old collection, largely complete by the 1970s, all wrapped carefully and much in superb condition. Plus quite a lot of soot. Many more will be offered in our Trains Galore sale in December."

Milbro from Roy Chambers

Among the most eagerly contested lots in the SAS sale was a Milbro three-rail Great Central Railway 4-6-2 tank locomotive estimated at £400-600. A UK collector ended up bidding £5500.

While collectors will have heard of Hornby, the name Milbro is perhaps not so familiar. It was the trade name of Mills Bros Model Engineers, a Sheffield firm started in 1919 which produced high-quality 0-gauge models, track and many other accessories.

Marsh added: "It's not by a special builder such as Beeson, but you only had to pick it up to realise that it was utterly gorgeous, beautifully detailed and painted in original GCR lined green and brown livery. Milbro, like Bond's and the best Bassett-Lowke, only made pieces in tiny numbers at huge expense in today's terms. This is a rare prototype and I'd never seen one before."

The Milbro GCR loco came from the Roy Chambers collection, a well-known 0-gauge collector and enthusiast who died in 2018. He grew up in a house in the Leicester suburbs in the 1920s, developing an early interest as the Great Central mainline ran opposite the family home.

Later, with his son Julian, he began visiting toy fairs looking for items to buy and later sell. Julian said: "In the late 1970s we took our first table at a fair and he then went on to exhibit at fairs on a regular basis and soon became a familiar face at fairs and auctions all over the country. He was getting things ready for a fair right up to a few days before he died."

Roy was well-known for his collection of Leeds, Milbro, Bond's and other 'non-mainstream' items, and SAS created a special category in the auction for these where they have been "reasonably positively identified". Marsh said: "There has never been an auction before with so much material of this type, to my knowledge. And online results overall were astonishing – £204,000 overall without premium."

A gift from Wallis Simpson

At Lacy Scott & Knight (20% buyer's premium) in Bury St Edmunds on June 27, a Louis Marx Stream Line electric train set sold for a mid-estimate £380. It had an intriguing royal connection.

In December 1941 this little-used set was given as a present to English schoolboy David Madden by the Duchess of Windsor, aka Wallis Simpson.

Madden had been relocated with his mother to the Bahamas during the war, where the Duke of Windsor was governor. Among the duties of the post was hosting a children's Christmas party at Government House in Nassau.

The train set itself was typical of the Marx company's intention to make affordable yet good-quality toys. This made them incredibly popular during the depression-hit 1930s and into the '40s and '50s. The boxed set, with instructions, was sold with the photograph of David receiving the gift from Wallis Simpson, his invitation to the party and a letter from Bishop Spence Burton to Mrs Madden thanking her for her help at a dance.

The set was consigned by a local collector and the saleroom reported it sold to a major London-based private collector bidding over the phone. ■

Big benefits from the miniature

Leicestershire saleroom Gildings is offering an extensive single-owner collection of large-scale model locomotives in an auction which will benefit a life-size steam railway.

They come from one of the region's prominent model railway enthusiasts – the late Kenneth 'Mike' Abbott. Over 70 gauge-1 and G-scale locomotives are available alongside three miniature locomotives which run on 7¼in track and another made for 5½in track, not to mention his 00-gauge collection which includes over 150 locos.

Above: live steam 7¼in gauge Orenstein & Koppel 0-4-2 tank engine, 2ft 7in (83cm), long, estimate £2500-3500 at Gildings.

Proceeds of the sale have been bequeathed to the Welshpool and Llanfair Light Railway, a narrow-gauge line built in 1903 to link farming communities with the market town of Welshpool. Following its closure in 1956, seven years later a group of enthusiasts began the process of reopening the railway.

Abbott was a prominent member of the Leicester Society of Model Engineers. He exhibited and ran his locomotives in various parts of the UK. As a result, the majority come in wooden cases for transportation and protection.

The auction will be held in Market Harborough on August 18. All lots are offered without reserve.

In a Whirligig at the £4800 return of Mr Turnip

The fortnightly Saturday afternoon TV show Whirligig was the first children's programme to be broadcast live from the BBC studios in Lime Grove, Shepherd's Bush.

First shown in November 1950, among the characters featured was Mr Turnip – described as "the obnoxious string puppet" by the turnipnet.com website. He appeared with "his hapless stooge Humphrey Lestocq, known to all as HL" and was voiced by Peter Hawkins who later provided the voices for Bill and Ben the Flowerpot Men and many other TV characters.

Mr Turnip was dreamt up by BBC producer Michael Westmore who was looking for puppet characters to appear on Whirligig.

Mr Turnip was operated by the young puppeteer Joy Laurey for the six years he was on the show. During the war Laurey (the great-grand-daughter of the famous Drury Lane clown Sam Laurey) had worked with her mother and sister in the Entertainments National Service Association, amusing troops with the puppets they were already making.

On June 23 at Teesside saleroom Vectis (20.83% buyer's premium), an original 22in (56cm) papier-mâché and limewood Mr Turnip puppet prop, handmade by Laurey, was offered with an estimate of £1200-2200 as part of a BBC TV Archive collection.

It came within a carrying case bearing a paper handwritten label to the inner lid reading Joy Laurey Puppet Studio Tiptree Essex.

Vectis said the buyer at £4800 was a collector and a Whirligig fan. "He said he had been looking for the puppet for a very long time. He arranged a phone bid as he didn't want to miss out."

Several other lots with items relating to Laurey were offered at Vectis, with one of the best performers being Mr Turnip original artwork and sketches which made £840 against an estimate of £40-60.

Airfix in full Attack Force against the Mad Barber and the Golden Bat

Toys from the Attack Force range are not the earliest of the Airfix models, but they are perhaps the most desirable, writes Roland Arkell.

Airfix first began producing plastic scale model kits for the mass market in 1952 with the 1/72 scale Attack Force series following in the late 1960s. Made as cheap plastic toys in budget card boxes, they were hugely popular with a generation of children but seldom treasured.

Today, examples in original packaging are among the rarest sets known to the collecting hobby. This goes some way to explain the feverish competition for this battle scene gift set offered by Lacy Scott Knight (20% buyer's premium) in Bury St Edmunds on June 27.

These sets, appearing in the Airfix catalogue of 1968, contain over 90 American and Japanese figures, nine support vehicles and a plastic battlefield play base.

Miraculously this set, consigned by a local private vendor, was housed in the original all-card lift-up lid box and included printed instructions. It was estimated to bring around £100 but it sold for £3100 to a buyer in Scotland bidding online.

Last year Tunbridge Wells auction house C&T sold a smaller bubble-backed set from the Attack Force range for £1700.

The Mad Barber and the Golden Bat

Some very rare 1960s-70s plastic assembly kits from the US and Japan formed part of the June 17-18 Toys, Books, Ephemera, Sporting, Stamps, Postcards & Cigarette Cards auction at Lockdales (18% buyer's premium) of Ipswich.

An Aurora Mad Barber in original box sold for £440 (estimate £20-40). The Aurora Plastics Corporation was founded in 1950 in Brooklyn, New York, by engineer Joseph E Giammarino and businessman Abe Shikesas.

Two years later it began to make its own line of plastic model kits, with 'TV toys' produced under licence from Universal Studios in the 1960s particularly popular.

The Mad Barber seems to be from a 'Mad Professionals' series made for sale in Canada in the early 1970s. The striking box artwork by James Bama is a big part of its attraction.

Consigned by the same local private collection were two kits by Japanese firm Imai. Both anime toys were unmade in original pictorial boxes retaining instructions and the small battery-powered motors that set these toys apart from their rivals.

A Model V Mark 3 Robot made £480 (£40-60), and a Golden Bat, c.1966, went for £380 (£80-120) – each going to different UK bidders on thesaleroom.com.

1. Airfix Attack Force battle scene set – £3100 at Lacy Scott & Knight.

2. Imai Robot Series Golden Bat plastic model kit – £380 at Lockdales.

3. Aurora The Mad Barber plastic assembly kit – £440 at Lockdales.

All Action Man bidding

Underlining the nostalgic appeal of the 1970s-80s toys that today's collectors once played with as children, this group of Action Man uniforms estimated at £40-60 sold for £1300 at the Keys (20% buyer's premium) Toys auction on July 7.

The 14 examples offered at the Aylsham saleroom came in the original packaging (for a useful list of such uniforms see the website actionmanhq.co.uk).

Action Man was introduced to the UK by Palitoy of Coalville, Leicestershire, in 1966 after gaining a licence to bring the successful Hasbro GI Joe figure of 1964 to the UK. The classic period of the toy lasted until 1984.

Star Wars badge of rank

It's admittedly not much to look at and just 2 x 3½in (5 x 8.5cm), but if you are a Star Wars collector this badge on offer estimated at £4000-6000 at East Bristol Auctions on July 24 means a great deal.

On the back of this simple piece of aluminium, with red and blue perspex panels to the front, a piece of velco states The original badge of rank of General Maximilian Veers in The Empire Strikes Back, played by Julian Glover.

The message was written by Glover himself, who has consigned 250 lots to the saleroom, including his costume and script from Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, after a lockdown 'sort out'. East Bristol said the actor had "lots more" 30 years ago but binned items he thought had no value.

This badge was one of several made for his Star Wars character and when filming completed he was given this example by the costume department as a souvenir. It is offered with an autographed photograph of Glover as Veers wearing a similar badge.

The best of trench art

First World War 'trench art' – objects made by soldiers, prisoners of war and interned civilians from munitions casings – does not get much better than this brass model of a Vickers machine gun.

Made in great detail and measuring a massive 22in (53cm), it carries a series of inscriptions including one reading To the Officers and Men of the Royal Regiment of Artillery and the Doctors and Nurses of the Military Convalescent Hospitals Comrades All. Below are the initials JMD and RPK (thought to be the makers of the piece) and the names of four Great War military hospitals in Calais, Alnwick, Whitehead and Belfast.

The model was acquired for a 'world-renowned collection' in 1957 and has since changed hands on at least one occasion.

Offered for sale by Martel Maides (17.5% buyer's premium) in St Peter Port, Guernsey, on June 30, it sold within estimate for £2600.

Going Underground

London Underground maps come up relatively regularly at auction – and typically it is the various 1930s states of the classic Harry Beck design that command the really high prices.

The group of more than 25 large format 'tube' posters and drawings offered for £250-300 at Loddon Auctions (15% buyer's premium) on June 24 offered something different. Dating from the 1940s onwards, they were catalogued as "an invaluable archive for anyone wishing to chart the various changes to the Underground system over the years".

Gary Arkell from the Berkshire auction house said: "These were part of a larger collection of railway related items which came with good provenance from a railway enthusiast. This lot included some annotated proof examples which, we believe, originated from the London Transport Publicity Office. There was a lot of interest and we ended up listing 60-plus pictures showing the backs and fronts of all items in the lot."

The extensive photography, showing errors and proofing marks, such as the misspelling of Pimlico station (pictured above), paid off. A UK phone bidder was tempted enough to pay £5100 for the archive.

'It was the coolest of bicycles'

An original Raleigh Chopper bicycle that may never have been ridden has been sold at Derbyshire saleroom Hansons (25% buyer's premium) for £1250 – more than double top estimate.

The MK2 Chopper offered on June 25 had been consigned by a Derby toy collector after he bought it from a Leicestershire man. The 54-year-old anonymous seller, who had owned one of the classic bikes as a child, said he'd kept it in his bedroom for years. "It took me seven years to find it. I looked at so many. But when you got there they were never as good as described. I bought it eight years ago, but I really had to persuade the owner to sell it. I'm only parting with it now because I need to thin out my collections.

"You could travel the length and breadth of the country for years and never come across a vintage Raleigh Chopper as good as this one."

Steve Fulford, toy valuer at Hansons, said: "These days kids crave the latest smartphones but if you grew up in the 1970s there was only one thing any self-respecting youngster wanted – a Raleigh Chopper. The design, influenced by dragsters and 'chopped' motorcycles, was so popular Raleigh sold over 1.5m of them. It was the coolest of bicycles and great for doing wheelies."

The Chopper, manufactured by Nottingham's Raleigh Bicycle Company, stood out in the 1970s because of its ground-breaking good looks. It was designed in response to the Schwinn Sting-Ray bicycle first manufactured in 1963.

The vendor consigned another Chopper to the sale that, in need of some restoration, made £520 against an estimate of £250-350.

4. Olympic and Titanic Third Class promotional brochure – £4000 at Charles Miller.

A section of maritime antiques offered at Adam Partridge (20% buyer's premium) in Liverpool on July 1-2 included an otherwise pedestrian Spode cup and saucer made c.1910, writes Roland Arkell.

In most guises this demitasse blue ground and gilt piece would command perhaps £10-20 but this one carries the registered No.580303 R4332, the marks of the Liverpool retailer Stonier & Co and magical words White Star Line. To the saucer is the monogram for the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company.

Spode created a number of designs for White Star (the pattern books list the first in 1899) but this particular design (R4332) was the most luxurious and was introduced in 1911 for use on the grandest ships of the day.

Importantly, this is the pattern believed to have been used in the First Class dining rooms on the Titanic, the Olympic and the Majestic.

Pieces have been recovered from the Titanic wreck site (together with other ceramics in other patterns by other manufacturers).

Others, such as this, were sold at the time as White Star souvenirs, given as gifts by the company, or remained in use until the Olympic was broken up in 1935 at the time of the merger with Cunard.

The knowledge that several have been offered at auction before – including that sold by Bonhams in 2011 for £3500 – made the estimate of £80-120 appear somewhat modest.

However, the hammer price of £8400, bid via thesaleroom.com, may be some sort of record.

Liner china – ceramics associated with shipping lines and the golden age of maritime travel – can occasionally throw up surprising results. Pieces from the early Victorian period are particularly desirable.

The Partridge sale also included three Staffordshire brown transfer-printed wares made for the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company.

The firm, established in 1823, served the cross-channel routes between Britain and Ireland for over a century. For 70 of those years it transported the Anglo-Irish mail, assuming responsibility from the Admiralty in 1850.

These three pieces, a 6in (16cm) dish and two egg cups c.1850, include the company's logo centred by a vignette of a steam clipper at sea. They are marked to the base for AB Buxton of Liverpool – a firm that the London Gazette of 1833 lists as an earthenware dealer trading from Cleveland Square, close to the Albert Dock.

Despite the poor condition (one egg cup has a large rim chip and the dish is badly stained), they improved on an estimate of £20-40 to sell at £1200, again to a bidder on thesaleroom.com.

The two poster girls

The Transport Memorabilia sale held by Henry Aldridge & Son (20% buyer's premium) in Devizes, Wiltshire, on June 20 featured a White Star poster sold for £36,000.

The rare 3ft 4in x 25in (1.01m x 63cm) poster features a rendition of the Olympic and Titanic ships in the run-up to the official launch in 1911. Enquiries are directed to Thomas Cook and Son, the venerable firm of travel agents that closed its doors in 2019.

This image was clearly a favourite of the White Star Line publicity department. The artwork by Montague Birrel Black (1884-1964) was used in a number of different promotional materials including postcards, menus, a second-class passenger list and on the cover of a 1911 souvenir edition of the Shipbuilder.

Nonetheless, this is a rare poster, with only a few copies having been offered for auction over the past 25 years. Once the Titanic sank on April 15, 1912, the White Star Line would have destroyed as many of these posters as they could.

The Titanic may have seemed the height of luxury for many ahead of that fateful 1912 voyage, but for Third Class passengers, mainly emigrants from Ireland and Scandinavia heading for the US, the accommodation on such transatlantic voyages was not as salubrious.

Catalogued as 'exceedingly rare', a Titanic Third Class promotional brochure, 4 x 6in (10 x 15cm), in very good condition, sold on low estimate for £4000 at marine and scientific auction house Charles Miller (24% buyer's premium) on July 7. It came from a private source and sold "to a private buyer who just fancied it for a while", says Miller.

The colour-printed covers feature an Olympic class liner steaming into New York and passing the Statue of Liberty.

Of the 706 Third Class passengers, just 178 survived the Titanic disaster.

East epitomises the Golden Age

Longcase underlines long and lucrative career of great London clockmaker

by Terence Ryle

The maxim that major names and top quality will always sell was underlined in the biannual specialist clocks sale at Dreweatts (25% buyer's premium).

Out of fashion longcases may be, but the c.1685 ebonised eight-day example offered in Newbury on June 24 was in fine condition with a sophisticated eight-day movement in a 6ft 3in (1.9m) tall panelled case. It was engraved to the 10in (25cm) square dial with the signature Edwardus East Londini.

Edward East (1602-96) had the longest and among the most lucrative careers of any of the great names of the Golden Age of English clockmaking, working for several monarchs and during the Interregnum. Made a freeman of the Goldsmiths Company in 1627, he was appointed as one of the first assistants of the Clockmakers Company in 1632 and – as a Royalist – was to become clockmaker to Charles II in 1660.

His career spanned some enormous leaps in technology. East was 54 when Christiaan Huygens first used a used a pendulum for a weight-driven clock in 1656 and 68 when William Clement produced what is credited with being the first longcase.

Dreweatts' clock, made during the reign of James II when East was in his 80s, included the latest refinements of the age such as bolt-and-shutter maintaining power and a strike train with internal locking integral with the rim of the great wheel. As with most lots in the catalogue, it was the subject of a small essay by Dreweatts specialist Leighton Gillibrand – a long-time practice which today looks custom-made for intenet bidders.

It sold online to a private collector right on mid-estimate at £50,000.

Wonderful Watson

Overall, the day ended with 84% of the 191 lots finding buyers and a hammer total of £322,660.

Most of the higher bids came from collectors, including the above-estimate £14,000 on a rare quarter-repeating ebony table timepiece signed to the backplate Samuel Watson, London.

1 & 2. Edward East longcase – £50,000 at Dreweatts.

3. Drocourt for Tiffany carriage clock – £8000.

4. Japy Freres singing bird clock – £7500.

5. Fournier-Galle mantel clock – £6500.

6. Samuel Watson bedchamber table timepiece – £14,000.

> Edward East had the longest and among the most lucrative careers of any of the great names of the Golden Age of English clockmaking

Watson's wealthy client list attests to his talents: he made two complex astronomical clocks for Isaac Newton and another for Charles II. This clock would have resided in a household that could afford at least two state-of-the-art timekeepers. With silent-pull quarter-repeat mechanisms sounding the hours and quarters on two bells only on demand, it was designed to allow for an unbroken sleep in the bedchamber.

The day's third five-figure star was a rare miniature ebony table clock with strike/silent selection and calendar aperture to the 4in (10cm) gilt-brass break-arch dial which was signed Henry Fish, London. Fish worked at the Royal Exchange from 1736-74.

It was a project: the 9in (23cm) tall break-arch case had some losses to the ebony veneer and the original pull-quarter repeat mechanism had been removed from a movement that had been converted from a verge to an anchor escapement. Nonetheless, it doubled the mid-estimate selling to a specialist dealer at £13,000.

French ticks

French clocks played a major role among the 19th century offerings.

Leading the field was a c.1870 gilt brass oval grande-sonnerie striking calendar carriage clock stamped to the backplate with Paris maker Pierre Drocourt's oval trademark and indistinctly inscribed to the dial for the retailer Tiffany, Paris. In good overall condition – the 6in (15cm) high gilt bronze case had very little wear – it doubled the lower estimate in selling to a collector at £8000.

A saleroom favourite was an 11in (28cm) gilt brass singing bird automaton clock. It was engraved to the movement for Japy Freres Et Cie, Exposition, 1855 Grande,Med., D'honneur and stamped and inscribed H'y Marc, Paris for Henry Marc, the early 19th century maker whose business by this point was mainly as a retailer. A small number of these Oiseaux Chantant automata were produced during the 1860s-70s – including an example sold in Geneva by Antiquorum eight years ago for around $40,000.

Dreweatts' example, which required restoration to release the bird on the hour and repair its two-note call, went to a Dutch buyer online at a mid-estimate £7500.

Noted dynasty

The skills of the noted horologist dynasty Fournier of Paris and Grenoble and of leading Paris bronzeur and gilder Claude Galle were combined in one of the sale's most eye-grabbing items: the 10in (25cm) tall ormolu and patinated bronze Empire mantel clock in the form of teapot.

Signed Fournier h'ger, a Grenoble to the dial, the clock's eight-day movement required work but was in good original condition, as was the case. One of the few top pieces to go to the specialist trade, it sold within estimate at £6500.

English 19th century horology was best represented by the more austere excellence of chronometers by two dominant names of the period.

One, dated 1815, was signed to the backplate Barrauds Cornhill London 750, the firm which supplied the Royal Navy for 75 years. Incorporating Harrison's maintaining power and Earnshaw-type spring detent escapement, the movement had some mid-19th century replacements as to be expected from a long-service naval chronometer. Housed in its 6in (15cm) wide, brass-bound three-tier mahogany box, it doubled the lower estimate in selling at £5000.

A second chronometer, c.1840, was inscribed to the 3½in (8cm) diameter silvered dial Charles Frodsham, 7 Pavement, Finsbury Park, London, No. 2012 and to the mahogany and brass box Arnold, Charles Frodsham, 84 Strand, London. Gillibrand deduced that, as Frodsham (1810-71) acquired the business of the late maker John Roger Arnold in 1843, here he was using up old stock from his former Finsbury address and Arnold's former business. It doubled the upper estimate, making £7000 online. ■

Bromsgrove metalwork blows estimates away

From the house clearance of a deceased estate, a small collection of Arts & Crafts metalwork triggered an estimate-demolishing response from dealers and collectors at Fieldings (20% buyer's premium).

The pieces were apparently unsigned, bore no marks and, with little known about their late owner, they were offered in a dozen lots at here-to-sell estimates at the June 24-25 sale at Stourbridge.

Specialists including London dealer Anthony Bernbaum identified them as c.1900-10 products of the highly respected Bromsgrove Guild of Applied Arts. As a result, all the lots got away to a collective £16,700, some 10 times the top estimate.

Links to artist

Bernbaum said later he had learned that the house and owner had family links to the minor Birmingham artist Lorenzo Hedley (1860-1940), who in the 1891 census is recorded as working in the family's brass foundry.

"It is tempting to assume he made the enamels," said Bernbaum, who owns the Peartree Collection dealership. But an ECJ monogram on a casket among the lots suggests some at least were by Ernest Charles Jeffries (1869-1942). He taught at the Bromsgrove School of Art as a metalworker and enameller for the Bromsgrove Guild from c.1902.

Bernbaum's two purchases at Stourbridge were two 2 x 6in (5 x 16cm) plaques in lead frames, one depicting a mermaid, the other a spray of delphiniums (£2800), and two depicting fish, a 7in (18cm) diameter circular example and a 7½ x 3½in rectangular one which took £1550.

"I was drawn to their rather sinister look about the eyes," he said. "Something of the Martinware wally birds about them."

The other plaques went similarly over modest estimates of around £100 each. Images of Symbolist style maidens, one standing in a woodland, 9 x 4in (23 x 10cm), and another with a peacock, 7in (1cm) square, took £1650 and £1450 respectively.

Same source

From the same source and similarly reckoned by bidders to be Bromsgrove Guild, c.1900-10, three copper and enamel vessels pieces all sold at around 10 times their guides.

An 8½in (22cm) diameter twin-handled pedestal bowl with a central enamel roundel of a goldfish made £1350 and a matched pair of around 8½in (22cm) diameter three-handled copper pedestal bowls, with enamelled bees to the spread feet and Tudor rose details to the bodies, took £1750.

Topping the section was a 4¾in (12cm) long copper and brass casket, featuring two enamel portrait panels of young maidens and enamel roundels below a stone-set cover and enamel roundels – one carrying the initials ECJ.

Bernbaum was not the buyer of that lot and it was only after the sale that the former banker's love of research led him to the Hedley-Jeffries link.

"I wish I'd done the research before," he said.

Collectors compete for dial clock

Estimated at £150-200, this Georgian dial clock stormed to £4800 at Charterhouse (25% buyer's premium) in Sherborne on July 3. Two collectors made much of the bidding.

Eighteenth century single fusee dial clocks in 'salt box' cases are enjoying a purple patch in the market – and provincial examples such as this from the 1780s are scarce.

Offered in original condition, it is inscribed to the 9in (23cm) dial with the name of Dorset maker James Barfoot, Winbourn (Wimborne). Little is known of Barfoot other than he worked in the market town of Wimborne from 1760-93. He signed up to the local militia in 1796, when he was described as being 5ft 6in tall and having four children.

Above: a faience japonisme vase by Théodore Deck – £10,000 at Hansons.

Designer Deck was a huge fan of all things Japan

This large 16in (40cm) high baluster faience vase, sold by Hansons (25% buyer's premium) in Teddington on June 27, is by 'father of art pottery movement' Joseph-Théodore Deck (1823-91).

It includes the famous 'bleu de Deck' – the rich turquoise glaze copied from Isnik ceramics that Deck first showed in 1874 at the Union Centrale des Beaux-Arts Appliqués à l'Industrie.

However, the decoration is unmistakably inspired by pottery from further east – and specifically the Japanese art that held such fascination to late 19th century Europeans.

Deck became one of Japonisme's great disciples. His obituary report said: "Deck died at Sèvres, in the little pavilion – with rooms of gold, satin, and velvet, filled with vases painted in manganese violet and yellow colours, lacquers, netsukes, and swords of Japan… He was inseparable from his surroundings; he wore the air of their art and charm as if he had been born among them."

This vase, inherited by the owner from a relative in Richmond, Surrey, was estimated at a modest £400-600, but took £10,000.

Casket reflects rags to riches story

This late Victorian silver-gilt and enamel 'freedom casket' offered for sale at Ibbett Mosely (15% buyer's premium) of Sevenoaks on June 17 carries the name of John Aynsley II (1823-1907) and was awarded following his tenure as mayor of Longton from 1886-90.

Aynsley was born into a dynasty of potters trading since the 1770s but his was not a 'silver spoon in the mouth' story.

Due to dire family circumstances, he had left school at the age of nine to begin work at two pence a day and later grafted up to 16 hours per day to hold down three jobs at three different pot banks. It was not until 1861 that he built the Portland Works and began to manufacture the bone china teawares that would make the Aynsley name famous.

He received this 14in (36cm) casket in October 1899, the year after the opening of Queen's Park, Longton, the first municipal park in the area that he funded. Retailed by WH Ashton of Longton, it carries the hallmarks for the maker Solomon Blanckensee and Son, and Birmingham 1899. The enamel plaques include pictures of local landmarks and the Longton coat-of-arms.

It topped the firm's first lockdown auction – conducted with only Alan White and his team of socially distancing staff in the room – when it sold to a private bidder new to the saleroom at £2500.

Ivory in demand ahead of trade ban

Despite – or because of – the imminent prohibition, good-quality antique ivory works of art continue to bring solid prices at auction.

At Dreweatts (25% buyer's premium) on May 19 a 2ft 6in (75cm) wide German Renaissance-style charger carved with mythological scenes, c.1870, sold at £13,000 (estimate £3000-5000).

It came from the estate of Betty Suenson-Taylor, the eldest child of Littlewoods founder Sir John Moores (1896-1993).

Leading the John Nicholson's (25% buyer's premium) sale in Fernhurst, West Sussex, on June 25 was a 13in (33cm) Augsburg tankard, c.1700, carved to the body with a chariot scene of merry-making cupids.

Mounted in silver and set to the lid with semi-precious stones and a carved ivory eagle, it sold at £7000.

Maori greenstone brought to Britain by 1820s adventurer

Pictured here is one of two 19th century or earlier Maori greenstone mere offered for sale by Reeman Dansie (20% buyer's premium) in Colchester on June 30, writes Roland Arkell.

Made in the highly valued pounamu stone for traditional close-quarter combat, mere were the most revered of all Maori weapons. They are highly collectable today, with these selling well over estimate at bids of £9600 and £12,500 to buyers using thesaleroom.com.

Both came for sale from the Weller-Poley family of Boxted Hall in Suffolk, descendants of George Weller-Poley (1783-1849), an adventurer who visited New Zealand in the 1820s.

Above: 19th century or earlier Maori greenstone mere – £12,500 at Reeman Dansie.

He brought back a number of Maori artefacts including the preserved head of a warrior or mokomokai that caused an international incident when offered for sale at Bonhams in 1988.

At the eleventh hour the consignor Nancy Weller-Poller agreed to withdraw the head and deliver it to New Zealand authorities – receiving in exchange a contemporary Maori greenstone mere as a token of thanks. It too was offered at the Colchester sale but it was passed at its estimate of £2000-3000.

Venison meets with approval

Second slice from Country Life gardens editor includes many works on a plants theme

by Alex Capon

A second tranche of works from the estate of Tony Venison, the long-serving gardens editor of Country Life, lifted the latest Modern British and 20th century art auction at Sworders (25% buyer's premium).

The 28 lots at the June 10 sale in Stansted Mountfitchet, Essex, comprised mainly pictures, although the consignment included a scattering of art books and even a Victorian mahogany chair painted with a panel of flowers that made £240.

All bar one lot from the group sold for a combined £40,390 hammer total. The best competition came for pictures selling below the £5000 level, demonstrating the developing interest but also the good value that is still evident for some slightly lesser-known artists in this sector.

According to his colleagues on Country Life, Venison was a kindly and self-effacing colleague. His obituary in The Times said he "resembled a delightful, inoffensive character from The Wind in the Willows, closer to Mole than Ratty".

Good friend Morris

When he died in last year, he left behind a notable garden at his home in Hill House in Sudbury. It included different species of sternbergia collected in the wilds of Andalusia by his good friend, the artist-plantsman Cedric Morris. He also assembled a significant art collection.

The works at Sworders focused mostly on plants, his primary interest, or had connections to his native East Anglian more generally.

Venison had been a frequent visitor to Benton End, Morris' former Suffolk home where he founded the East Anglian School of Painting and Drawing in 1968, and he had acquired a number of works by Morris himself.

Two Morris works from the Venison collection had sold at the Sworders in October last year, making a combined £28,000. A further example appeared at the current sale, the painting Senegalese Boy (see box on facing page).

While that picture sold slightly above estimate, a drawing depicting Morris by one of his pupils was also part of the Venison consignment here and drew even more vigorous bidding. Although it made a lesser sum, it made arguably the more impressive price especially for a seemingly quickly executed sketch.

1. Succulent on a Chair by Joan Warburton – £4200 at Sworders.

2. The Dog Show, a wood engraving by Eileen Lucy 'Tirzah' Garwood – £2100.

3. A pencil sketch of Cedric Morris by Kathleen Hale – £1700.

4. Summer bunch by Gertrude Harvey – £8200.

5. Sarah Reflecting by Ken Howard – £23,000.

> These homegrown artists are still largely affordable – but for how much longer?

The 8¼ x 5½in (21 x 14cm) pencil sketch by Kathleen Hale (1898-2000) showed Morris in profile. It was dated 1944.

As a young artist in her 20s, Hale was part of the artistic circle centred around Fitzrovia but later she moved to Suffolk and took lessons during the Second World War from Morris and Arthur Lett-Haines at the school they founded in Dedham.

In a way the drawing represented the somewhat triangular relationship of the three artists – Hale had an affair with Lett-Haines, who himself was the partner of Morris for over 60 years.

Like many of the works from the Venison estate, it was given a temping estimate as it was clearly 'there-to-be sold'. Here the pitch was £200-300 and, after a number of interested parties entered the bidding, it was eventually knocked down at £1700, the highest price for a pencil drawing by the artist at auction according to Artprice.com.

Warburton work

A work by another artist who had been a student at the East Anglian School of Painting and Drawing from 1937-40 also generated strong competition. Succulent on a Chair by Joan Warburton (1920-96), a 2ft x 20in (61 x 51cm) signed oil on canvas from 1966, was another work from the Venison estate.

The artist, who sometimes signed her work with her married name O'Malley, had painted an earlier still-life on the reverse – a pleasing depiction of a pestle and mortar, eggs and a wine bottle – giving the lot something of a 'two for the price of one appeal'. However, in any case, the work was deemed to be a rare commercial opportunity by a number of parties, with the creative composition of the succulent spiky plant being enclosed by the chair's frame lending it a poignant and striking appeal.

Right: Qypsy Queen caravans in a Sussex Meadow by Cedric Morris – £18,000 at Sworders.

Morris major

Cedric Morris (1889-1982) is now a major name in the Mod Brit market whose most bountiful flower paintings can sell for over £100,000. While Sworders has a strong track-record with the artist-plantsman, works depicting two rather different subjects were offered at the latest sale in this category on June 10.

Qypsy Queen caravans in a Sussex Meadow, a relatively early work from 1927, had a dedication to Phyllis in the lower right. This was a reference to the Oxfordshire vendor's mother Phyllis Pitcairn Gage-Brown, who was a childhood friend of Paul Odo Cross, the son of an American heiress and a close friend of Morris at that time.

Gage-Brown owned one of the caravans in the picture and Odo Cross the other. At the time the picture was painted, Morris was working from a studio at Great Ormond Street and had joined the Seven and Five Society of London painters and sculptors – two years before he would move to rural Suffolk.

The oil on canvas measured 18 x 23¼in (46 x 59cm) and was offered unframed. It sold on thesaleroom.com within estimate at £18,000 and was knocked down to a private buyer.

An even earlier work by Morris at the sale came from the estate of Tony Venison (see main article on these pages).

Senegalese Boy was painted during a holiday in Tizi-Ouzou, Algeria, in 1921, one of a number of studies of the local people and well before he turned his main attention to flora and landscapes. Estimated at £5000-7000, it sold to a different buyer at £8200.

Four Bawdens go to three buyers

Edward Bawden (1903-89) is an artist whose work appears frequently at Sworders. This is in part due the fact that the village of Great Bardfield, home to the artistic community of which he was a leading light, is less than half an hour's drive from the Stansted Mountfitchet saleroom.

The auction house's latest Mod Brit sale on June 10 included a group of four pen and ink sketches that came for sale from the estate of Cambridge resident Lady Elizabeth Cavendish, the daughter of the 10th Duke of Devonshire who was a childhood friend of the Queen and lady-in-waiting to Princess Margaret.

Two depicted scenes of East Anglian village life, while the other two were London scenes, and all of them exceeded estimates ranging from £1000-2000.

They were part of a group of a dozen drawings created by Bawden for use in 1955 edition of The English Scene, a diary and notebook published by textiles firm Morton Sundour Fabrics.

First up were the East Anglian views, Morris Dancing at Thaxted and Village Fete that sold at £2200 and £2800 respectively.

Generating even stronger bidding was The Painters' River, Chelsea Embankment and a depiction of the great Victorian glasshouse at Kew titled Greenhouse Management. These fetched £4700 and £3200 respectively.

The four Bawden drawings went to three different private online buyers, either based in London or locally to Sworders.

Warburton became an established name during the course of her career – she had around 10 solo exhibitions at galleries over a 20-year period and participated in mixed shows at the Royal Academy and Leicester Galleries – but her works have never had much prominence on the secondary market. Before this sale, only a couple of paintings had ever sold at auction for over £1000.

This one was estimated at £600-800, a level no doubt guided by previous saleroom records but here bidders responded favourably to both the painting itself and also its good provenance. It was eventually knocked down to a trade buyer at £4200, a record for the artist according to Artprice.com.

A further Venison lot going well beyond estimate was The Dog Show, a small print from 1929 by Eileen Lucy 'Tirzah' Garwood (1908-51), the wife of Eric Ravilious who has gained increasing recognition in her own right over the last few years.

While few of her works have appeared at auction before, commercially she shot to prominence in May 2017 when a painting of two donkeys in a stable made £24,000 at Cheffins' sale of works from the collection of Cambridge County Council.

The 6¼ x 5in (16 x 12.5cm) wood engraving here was from an edition of 500 and easily surpassed its £150-250 estimate, selling at £2100 to a private London buyer. The price was well in excess of previous sums for this print at auction and suggested the 2017 result probably had a serious effect on the artist's values, something that may well bring more works out of the woodwork.

Affordable for now

As Sworders' picture specialist Jane Oakley said: "The East Anglian works in particular performed with gusto. These homegrown artists are still largely affordable – but for how much longer?"

In terms of works in Venison's collection by artists from beyond his East Anglia, a small Mary Fedden (1915-2012) watercolour, The Cut Melon, 1994, sold online to a London collector at £3600 against a £800-1200 estimate. A John Craxton (1922-2009) crayon on brown paper, Landscape, Lanzarote from 1975, sold to a buyer in Salisbury for £6000 against a £2000-3000 pitch.

"There were some really strong prices across the board" said Oakley. "The lack of viewing opportunities in the lockdown certainly didn't hamper interest or prevent clients from digging deep.

"Overall, it was an encouraging day for the market, showing that despite the uncertainties, people still want to buy art."

The top lot of the sale overall was Sarah Reflecting by Ken Howard (b.1932). The 3ft 4in x 4ft (1.02 x 1.22m) signed oil on canvas from 2000 came from a separate source – a local collector of Howard's work who bought it from the Royal Academy Summer Exhibition in the year it was painted.

While works by the London-born artist appear regularly at auction, this example, which was estimated at £8000-12,000, appealed strongly to followers of the artist, depicting his favourite model draped in blue looking in a mirror.

It was knocked down online to a private buyer at £23,000, the second highest price for Howard at auction according to Artprice.com.

An earlier painting by another artist but, again, one of numerous works exhibited by the painter at the RA produced one of the best performances at Sworders.

The still-life of garden flowers by Newlyn School artist Gertrude Harvey (1879-1966) was a 20¼ x 22in (52 x 56cm) signed oil on canvas. It had provenance to dealer David Messum back in the 1990s and came to auction from came from a vendor in Essex with an estimate of just £250-350.

Generating hefty competition that easily carried it beyond this level, it was eventually knocked down to a UK buyer bidding over the phone at £8200.

The price was another auction record according to Artprice.com. ■

Holy Land owned by creator

Unusual proof example of mid-19th century work was a copy which belonged to Roberts

by Ian McKay

Stand-out lot in a London auction that spent three weeks online before ending on June 4 was an unusual example of David Roberts' The Holy Land, Syria, Idumea, Arabia, Egypt & Nubia... of 1842-49.

Part of a 99-lot Worlds Beyond sale held by Christie's (25/20/12.5% buyer's premium) and sold at a double-estimate £80,000, it was a complete example of the rare tinted proofs before titles issue – one in which such text was printed on a separate leaf. More than that, it was a copy owned by Roberts himself.

These 'tinted proof' sets proved to be far less appealing than either the ordinary tinted copies or the deluxe, hand-coloured sets and Christie's could identify only three others sold at auction in the past 40 years.

Roberts died in 1864 and Christie's first auctioned his pictures, before in May 1865 offering his library. This Holy Land... set was acquired at £30 10s 0d by London dealer Bernard Quaritch, who may well have had the cabinet in which it appeared here specially made at the time.

Other notable results included, at £13,000, an 1847 first of Hermann von Helmholtz's Über die Erhaltung der Kraft..., a work containing the first comprehensive statement of the first law of thermodynamics.

A very different addition to this sale was a group of ink on paper drawings by Sir Quentin Blake – a dozen 'Imaginary Friends' created specially to raise funds for 'Comic Relief' and other charities needing support during the coronavirus pandemic.

Prior to the sale Blake explained: "When I was asked to make some drawings for Comic Relief I naturally thought of all those people isolated by lockdown, and I realised that I voluntarily spend quite lot of time on my own, with pen in hand, drawing imaginary friends (well, not always friends, actually)."

Each drawing was given a notional estimate of £500-800 but they raised £54,400 in all and the drawing of a man and a big bear seen above led the bidding at £9500. ■

Last and lawless William

Published in 1970, William the Lawless marked the last appearance in full book form of Richmal Crompton's much-loved schoolboy hero – almost 50 years on from the publication of the first, Just William of 1922.

Crompton's irrepressible creation had actually made a first appearance in 'The Outlaws', a story published in a woman's magazine during the First World War, and he appeared in many other publications over the years – but it is the books that are the main focus for collectors.

At £575 the copy (right) sold in a June 16-17 sale held by Keys (20% buyer's premium) was not a record breaker – three or four copies have made more at auction and in 2008 Bloomsbury sold one for £1100 – but it was followed at £1500 by a lot focusing on William's magazine appearances.

Dating from 1923-40 were some 80 issues in original wrappers of The Happy Mag, most of them featuring stories about the boy who remained forever just 11 years old.

The most expensive lot of the Norfolk sale was very different, being a five-volume set of Alexandre du Sommerard's Les Artes du Moyen Age. A finely bound first edition set of 1836-48 – the elephant folio atlas volume containing over 500 litho plates, 368 of them coloured – it made £3600.

Euclid's Elementa in Arabic

One of the "very earliest books printed in Arabic by means of moveable type" made £18,000 at Bloomsbury Auctions (25/20/12% buyer's premium).

The sale of Islamic Works on Paper had been postponed from March and finally held on June 12. The very first lot offered was an Arabic recension of the Elementa of the Greek mathematician Euclid, originally written in Alexandria c.300BC, but here as printed in Rome in 1594.

This Typographia Medicea edition features a translation made by Nasir al-Din al-Tusi, a 13th century Persian astronomer and polymath best known, said Bloomsbury, for identifying geometry as an independent mathematical discipline.

Textually complete and exceptionally clean in its later 19th century binding, it was an example of the expensively produced editions that emerged in the years 1584-1614 from this important press established under the patronage of Cardinal Ferdinando dei Medici.

The defining quote that opens this report is taken from a study by Robert Jones of the press and the impact in Europe of its Arabic publications.

Grahame's lost inspiration

A letter (right) in which Kenneth Grahame writes about the suicide of his son, Alastair, sold at East Bristol Auctions (18% buyer's premium) on June 19 for £1200.

Responding to a letter of condolence from someone who had known Alastair well, he writes: "The dear boy went back to Oxford this term so full of new plans and interests, with 'Mods' safely behind him, and liberty to follow a wider range of thought and reading. From all we can glean, his last days were specially happy ones."

Alastair, who was born blind in one eye and was constantly plagued with health problems, took his own life on May 7, 1920 – just five days before his 20th birthday.

Grahame based The Wind in the Willows, first published in 1908, on stories he used to tell his son.

Geniuses score six out of 10 in test

Running to just 10 lots and held online from June 1-10, Essential Genius: Ten Important Manuscripts for Modern Times was a Bonhams New York (27.5/25/20/13.9%) auction.

Of the six lots that found buyers, the most expensive, at $150,000 (£117,645), actually dated from the 15th century and was a translation from the Greek of the 5th century BC 'Dialogues' of Plato made by Leonardo Bruni, called Aretino, who has added his own learned discourse.

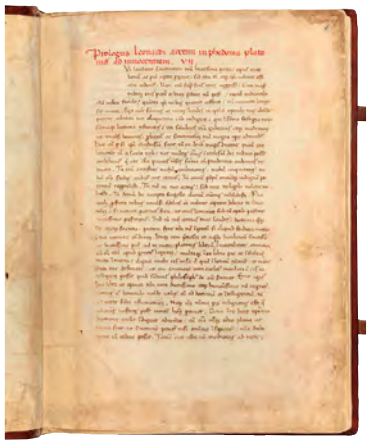
Described as a "museum quality" manuscript, it was last seen at auction in Germany in 1991 and later formed part of the Bibliotheca Philosophica Hermetica collections of JR Ritman.

Not so very far behind in price terms was a letter from a man who described himself as a philosopher of mathematics, Ludwig Wittgenstein.

Sent in 1935 to the German philosopher and physicist, Moritz Schlick, it takes as its subject the celebrated 'incompleteness theorem' published just a few years earlier by mathematician, logician and analytic philosopher, Kurt Gödel.

Described by Bonhams as "...a central document in the philosophy of mathematics that... reveals Wittgenstein at the height of his philosophic genius", it sold at $110,000 (£86,275).

Other high spots included, at $65,000 (£50,980), two pages of unpublished notes that, shortly after the 'Great Plague of London', were made by Isaac Newton after reading Jan Baptiste van Helmont's 1667 book, De Peste. Among them he includes one quite repulsive-sounding potential remedy involving a dead toad.



Above: a leaf from the 15th century translation and critical study of the 'Dialogues' of Plato by Leonardo Bruni, called Aretino – $150,000 (£117,645).

Below: the elusive signature of Nicolai Ivanovitch Lobachevski – $25,000 (£19,610).

Sold at $25,000 (£19,610) was a letter of resignation from the post of Curator of Regional Education in Kazan bearing what the cataloguer called the 'Black Pearl' of scientific autographs.

It was the only example seen at auction in at least 50 years of the signature, using just his surname, of a Russian mathematician. His true claim to fame is as the discoverer of non-Euclidean geometry, but to many people he is much better known, I suspect, as the inspiration for one of Tom Lehrer's most famous songs: 'Nicolai Ivanovitch Lobachevski is his Name, Oy!'

Among 13 lots from an 'important private collection' offered by Thomas Del Mar at Olympia Auctions on July 30 will be this 54-bore south German breech-loading self-spanning wheel-lock holster pistol.

Made in Augsburg in the mid 16th century, it was formerly in the collection of Lord Astor of Hever. As stated in the Hever catalogue of 1983, 'this pistol displays exceptional technical innovation for the period. It can be loaded at the breech with a removable cartridge that is complete with a pan, thus allowing the user to insert a preloaded and primed cartridge into the chamber. Furthermore, it can be used as a self-spanning wheellock or primed with a key. No other pistol of this early date displays so many refinements.'

It is estimated at £25,000-30,000.

The Smoking Evening was to benefit The Artists' Annuity Fund – the charitable body supported by the contributions of its members, for their own relief in sickness. All artists of merit in painting, sculpture, architecture, and engraving, were eligible to become members.

This ticket carries the name T Walter Wilson, probably for Thomas Walter Wilson (1851-1912), who worked successfully as both a landscape painter and a magazine illustrator during the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

As the Penal Laws created a wave of economic social and religious hardship in Ireland, the object shown here provided a portable relic of worship at a time when the Catholic religion was under threat.

Known as a Penal Cross, it is a carved single piece of fruitwood with the figure of Christ. It is inscribed with INRI (Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudaeorum), chalice, arrow, ladder, cockerel and cooking pot on the front and HIS and the date 1784 on the reverse. Found in an old house in Co Kildare, it comes to auction at Whyte's of Dublin in The Eclectic Collector July 25-26 sale from a private collection.

These devotional artefacts are thought to have a strong association with the pilgrimage site at Lough Derg, Co Donegal, where they were made and sold to pilgrims visiting the site.

Estimate €1500-2000.

The designer of the 'argyle' is traditionally thought to be John Campbell, the fifth Duke of Argyll, and his wife Elizabeth Gunning, Baroness Hamilton of Hameldon.

They lamented the way that, during the cold Scottish winters, gravy arrived cold to their table from the kitchens of Inverary Castle. A double-walled vessel that could be filled with hot water or internal compartment that could be heated with an iron rod from the fire solved the problem.

This example, made by Edward Fernell, London 1785, has a removable lidded hot water compartment to the interior. At Fellows' sale of Antiques, Silver & Collectables in Birmingham on July 27 the estimate is £600-900.

The Roseberys London sale of Chinese, Japanese & South East Asian Art on July 28 includes this pair of imperially inscribed Qianlong mark and period famille rose wall vases estimated at £20,000-30,000. They were inherited in c.1950 and come from a private west London collection.

Wall vases, also known as wall pockets or sedan chair vases, became one of the Qianlong Emperor's favourite types and developed significantly during his reign. Of the 320 Qianlong examples recorded in the collection of the Palace Museum in Beijing, about 138 of them are inscribed with poems by the emperor.

This pair with a ruby ground feature The Hanging Bottle, a verse dated to the 1758 in which the emperor expresses his delight in seeing a wall vase filled with a flower hanging inside of his sedan chair on the way to a hunting trip.

A family collection of early pieces of furniture by Robert 'Mouseman' Thompson goes under the hammer at Tennants on July 25 in the 20th Century Design Sale.

Dating from the 1930s, they were commissioned by the late William Becket Henderson, a wool merchant from Keighley and later Kettlewell, near Skipton. Thompson's original sales records held in the workshop archive at Kilburn, North Yorkshire, show that Henderson began commissioning furniture as early as 1926, when the Mouseman made a table for him.

A selection of items commissioned by Henderson are coming up for sale, which include fine bedroom furniture, a desk and two corner cupboards.

Shown here, however, is a Portrait of John Henderson, son of William Becket Henderson, in which the young boy is seated on a Mouseman stool. It was painted in 1950 by Reginald Grange Brundrit, who was educated in Skipton and Bradford, and the painting was exhibited at the Royal Academy.

Estimate £300-500.

Active in August

With lockdown easing significantly and an uncertain calendar of autumn events ahead, the London trade will be far busier than usual this August. Many dealers are taking unconventional, often collaborative, approaches to business, from outdoor showcases to street parties to online projects. Frances Allitt looks ahead to what the capital will offer in late summer

August is usually the quietest month for the London trade. Dealers often shut up shop, taking advantage of the break between early summer events and the autumn's busy fairs schedule. This year, however, following the pinch of lockdown and facing uncertainty in the back half of the year, many are doing things differently.

When porcelain dealer Serhat Ahmet was forced to cancel plans for both his summer and autumn events, for example, he decided to take matters into his own hands.

He had planned to celebrate the opening of his new Cecil Court shop with a summer exhibition. It was timed to coincide with the bustle of buyers that normally descend on the London in June and July to attend Masterpiece, The Art & Antiques Fair Olympia, London Art Week (LAW) and the major summer auctions.

All that changed. Masterpiece ran online, summer Olympia was rescheduled to next year and LAW launched a virtual platform. Galleries were permitted to reopen only from July 4, and even those staging shows held them relatively quietly and by appointment only.

Ahmet decided to hold back his highlight pieces to show at the LAPADA Art & Antiques Fair in September – but that was also postponed until 2021.

However, rallying the other art and antiques businesses on the historic Westminster street, Ahmet launched the Cecil Court Summer Showcase. On August 15, dealers on the street are to fill the large Victorian fronted shop windows with their best and newest stock. Visitors to the pedestrianised street will have the chance to attend a sort of outdoor, single-aisle fair.

For Ahmet, this showcase was an ideal solution: a chance to exhibit some top items as well as the small Cecil Court community itself of which he is the newest member.

"We have these beautiful shops and all this stock that we'd been holding back for the big London summer," Ahmet tells ATG, adding that it is the line of large frontages that defines this art and antiques mini-district. "We can't do an event that involves drinks and food like we would wish to, but this is a way of exhibiting our new-found or held-back pieces."

> Cecil Court is one of the few places where the public can enjoy pre-lockdown style browsing

Participants include silver specialist Daniel Bexfield, Colin Narbeth & Son, the London Medal Company and Darnley Fine Art as well as Essex auction house Sworders, whose London office is based here.

Tim Bryars of Cecil Court map specialist Bryars & Bryars said: "With no book, map or antique fairs going on, it's one of the few places where the public can enjoy pre-lockdown style browsing, across a range of rare and antiquarian books and maps, art and antiques.

"The expertise and quality of material on offer makes Cecil Court a great place to shop at any time, but at the moment the experience of being here feels more precious than ever."

Any other year, a mid-August date would be a hopeless time to run an event. The influx of foreign buyers who come to London for the major fairs depart quickly, while locals take the summer holidays as a chance to escape the capital.

However, several pockets of London dealers have demonstrated that this year – especially when an event requires stock at hand, no extra outlay and a bit of collegial spirit – it is worth running on into the summer.

Over in the west

Across town in west London, the Kensington Church Street Art & Antique Dealers Association launched the inaugural edition of its summer showcase online in mid-June. The event, with the theme 'Fit for Royalty,' has been extended until the end of August as dealers gradually reopen premises.

Over in Mayfair and St James's, LAW participants hung their exhibitions in early July, opening by appointment, and many will keep them up at least until the end of the month. Some, such as Colnaghi, will run longer still. Its Golden Age of Spanish Modern Art continues until September 25

(see box on following page). Meanwhile, the LAW website will maintain individual dealers' stock pages well into the autumn.

Also in Mayfair, several Modern and Contemporary galleries have contributed works to the exhibition Block Party, staged by The Arts Club on Dover Street. Running until September, this brings together works from Robilant + Voena, Galerie Thaddaeus Ropac, David Zwirner, Cardi Gallery and other local firms.

For each dealer, the decision of whether to exhibit now or to hold off until autumn is tricky. Much depends on each trader's knowledge of its client base. Unknown factors could tip the scales. For example, restrictions have rapidly been lifting in England, which could mean that clients will start returning before the autumn.

Mark Dodgson, secretary general of BADA, said: "It may be possible that with quarantine restrictions having been removed for visitors from a number of countries some foreign buyers might surface. It's also hard to judge how many UK-based buyers will leave the UK over the next few weeks for last-minute holidays. If they remain in the UK, then it could be good for business."

If buyers are around, being as available as possible could be key. "While the UK is slowly coming out of lockdown, the reality is that our high streets are still quiet in comparison to the pre-Covid-19 era and consumer confidence is low," says LAPADA CEO Freya Simms.

"We therefore very much feel that dealers should be continuing to channel as much resource as they are able into projects, exhibitions and other marketing activations that give consumers a reason to visit them – be that in person or online."

Some dealers feel that August will remain its usual quiet self. Colnaghi CEO Jorge Coll says that despite running its current show from July to September, the gallery is focusing on the autumn.

"While footfall is always quieter during the summer, we have put a concerted effort into our digital initiatives, videos, social media and VR projects, which have enabled us to maintain a connection with our clients during this difficult period," Coll says. "We look forward to continuing to advance these initiatives in September for our forthcoming show."

Nigel Talbot runs the Covent Garden shop Grosvenor Prints, which has continued to release monthly catalogues, with another due this month.

However, he is holding back the 'blockbuster' catalogue he planned to release in May until September. "August is always a dead month," he said. "People will try to go away if they can. They might be buying but they won't be coming to London. They don't want to go on public transport."

His major catalogue usually draws visitors into the gallery to inspect works first-hand and he's willing to wait to show it off if it could mean more visitors willing to come through the shop. ■

London updated with a fifties festival

The first version of this map of London was issued by the Southern Railway in 1938. It was designed by Kerry Lee (1902-88) who brought up to date for British Railways in the 1950s.

As well as adding features such as the Royal Festival Hall, the border was reworked with the coats of arms of each borough replacing Commonwealth coats of arms, a symbolic shift from depicting London as the capital of the empire. The map is populated with historical figures, London 'types' and visitors asking directions.

This quad royal pictorial map is offered by Bryars & Bryars for £2500 and is included in the Cecil Court Summer Showcase.

Material that suits yew

Roseveor (1985), below right, was carved by British artist Denis Mitchell (1912-93) out of yew, an unusual material for him used in just one other sculpture. The form is characteristic of his work, however, first appearing in the 1960s when he worked in St Ives.

Offered for £38,000, it is part of Osborne Samuel's annual Modern British show, which usually coincides with Masterpiece. Though the gallery considered holding it back, it ultimately launched it as part of London Art Week and will carry it through the summer.

"My instinct is that people will book their holidays in August but, as we are only just opening, the thinking was that if people can come in July and August at least they will have something to come and look at," says the gallery's Peter Osborne.

The gallery is also producing a printed version of the catalogue of its spring online show about Nash and Nevinson (shown above), which already has more than 100 orders.

Upcoming fair dates

Frieze and Frieze Masters have joined the steadily lengthening list of fairs to be cancelled or rescheduled as a result of coronavirus. The October fair cited logistical issues including travel quarantine restrictions as it rescheduled the Regent's Park events to next year. It will host an online viewing room instead.

Two weeks ago, PAD London became one of the latest in a long line of major fairs to be cancelled or rescheduled as a result of coronavirus. The fair, which has a large European exhibitor base and sister events in Paris and Geneva, cited the UK's 'unstable health conditions' and rescheduled for October next year.

The ongoing list of changes and cancellations means there are uncertain days ahead for those who rely on these events.

- Tribal Art London (September) – rescheduled for 2021
- LAPADA Art & Antiques Fair (September) – rescheduled for 2021
- British Art Fair (September 24-27) – planned to proceed pending government advice
- Coinex London (September) – rescheduled for 2021
- Decorative Antiques & Textiles Fair, Battersea (September 29- October 4) – planned to proceed with new safety procedures contingent on government advice
- Frieze and Frieze Masters – (October) cancelled, replaced with virtual viewing room
- PAD London (October) – rescheduled for 2021
- Winter Art & Antiques Fair Olympia (November 3-8) – announced last month that it will go ahead with safety measures contingent on government advice

Young's voyage of discovery

This primitive English sailor-work ship picture, c.1870, depicting a cutter in full sail on a calm sea was made with coloured wools embroidered on canvas. Offered for £3500, it is among the works on offer in an extra catalogue to be produced by Battersea folk art gallery Robert Young Antiques this year.

These embroidered ship portraits, which generally depict naval warships, merchant vessels or private yachts broadside, were popular in Britain particularly in the 1860s-80s.

Though sometimes believed to be the work of sailors on long voyages, it is possible that some portraits were stitched for seamen by artisans familiar with the sea.

Launching online in August, Old Salt will feature a range of nautical works, with a collection of woolworks, such as the one pictured, at its heart.

The catalogue is an addition to the gallery's usual schedule, which Young devised during the disruption of lockdown.

Left: Daniel Crouch Rare Books offers the Harisse Codex, attributed to the cartographer Agnese, for $4.5m as part of Amor Librorum Nos Unit.

Below: a screen shot from the catalogue.

Books unite the trade

This portolan atlas known as the Harisse Codex is attributed to cartographer Battista Agnese, who worked in Venice. Agnese produced highly decorated manuscript atlases for a number of royal patrons (Charles V, Philip II of Spain) and while this work is not recorded in a census of his portolans compiled in 1931, it corresponds with a group he produced from 1545-55 and has been attributed by the bibliographer Henry Harisse.

The volume is offered in its original binding by Daniel Crouch Rare Books for $4.5m in the interactive online catalogue Amor Librorum Nos Unit ('the love of books unites us').

Named for the ILAB motto, the catalogue is a major project and the result of collaboration between seven book dealers: Crouch, Stéphane Clavreuil, Jörn Günther, Peter Harrington, Jonathan Hill, Umberto Pregliasco and Bernard Shapero. It was released in early July, though Crouch says Günther came up with the idea while leaving this year's curtailed TEFAF Maastricht.

It features 35 manuscripts spanning from 1255-1962 laid out in chronological order. Each work can be explored in depth by visiting an individual page linked to from the main catalogue.

"One of the things I've been trying to do during lockdown is to think of new ways to engage with existing and potential customers while some of the more traditional avenues of fairs, exhibitors and gallery visits are compromised," says Crouch, who is also redesigning his website (due to launch in September).

He stresses that he has found it possible to sell valuable works online, but adds: "Capturing a conception of scale has been the hardest element – in the end the only way we could give a sense of the sheer size of some of our monumental wall maps was to hire the studio the Spice Girls shot videos in and hang it with 18th century town plans."

Dealers love online selling

A presentation copy of Lady Chatterley's Lover by DH Lawrence became Peter Harrington's biggest ticket Instagram sale to date when it was snapped up for more than £30,000 this summer. It was inscribed by the author to publisher Edward Titus and accompanied by a typed letter from Lawrence to Titus from 1929.

The Mayfair bookseller has been looking for more ways to capitalise on the digital market since lockdown began. It recently launched its first interactive digital catalogue, which focuses on the Indian sub-continent, and is one of the dealers taking part in Amor Librorum Nos Unit (see story left).

Although the shop has reopened, Pom Harrington says that "online will continue to be key while people get comfortable venturing outdoors again".

He adds: "The current situation has encouraged some of our more traditional customers to make the move online, which we expect will open up many interesting new avenues to reach out to book-lovers.

"We've known it for a number of years and the coronavirus crisis has only accelerated a move that was inevitable. While a physical store isn't going anywhere for the moment, booksellers need to be online – ultimately, that's where our customers are."

Webinar advice

Many of LAPADA's recent efforts for members have been web-based, starting with a series of mid-lockdown webinars on how to work, market and sell art and antiques online. It followed with another series dubbed LAPADA Leaders, which features CEO Freya Simms in conversation with figures such as Tristram Hunt of the V&A. More episodes are planned for the coming months, covering subjects such as tech, jewellery and fashion.

Simms said: "Since the start of lockdown LAPADA has positively encouraged its members to find new routes to market, increase their digital footprint and market themselves more effectively, as we know how important it is that they are able to access potential clients and new buyers at this challenging time.

"This remains vital, particularly as these members have also lost the lifeline of live events for the immediate future."

Among those reinventing their online presence is Kevin Page Oriental Art in Islington's Camden Passage. "We are open for business and customers are very welcome to come and visit the gallery, but it is very much 'by appointment only'," says the firm's Matthew de Boise. "We are not quite back at the gallery every day yet, so we really want to ensure that customers aren't disappointed if they arrive and we're not here to greet them.

"Similarly, to ensure we can comply with social distancing recommendations, we need to limit the number of visitors to the gallery at any one time so arranging an appointment in advance helps to pre-empt such issues."

At the minute, online is still the less constrained option. Kevin Page used the lockdown as a chance to capitalise on online opportunities, buying at international online salerooms. Now it has launched a new interactive website of its own, which it plans to add to over the coming weeks and months.

Philip Mould and Company has also kept the focus online, posting videos and content onto its website, including lectures and online exhibitions. However, the gallery has reopened now, and its upcoming web series Art in Focus, running for five weeks from August to September, will be based in the premises.

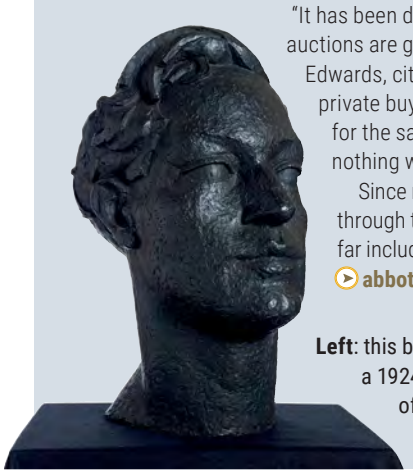
The 2020 Duncan Grant

Abbott & Holder recently sold a bronze head of Duncan Grant (1885-1975) by Stephen Tomlin (1901-37) to the Charleston Trust, owners of the East Sussex home where Grant once lived and worked with other members of the Bloomsbury Group.

It was one of an edition of two known to have been cast in 1925 at Giovanni Fiorini's foundry in Battersea, and was the only one known to be in private hands.

Now the gallery, based appropriately in Bloomsbury, has commissioned a further 15 bronzes to be cast from the 1924 original by Bronze Age London. Each will be available for £6000 + VAT and 15% of each sale will be donated to the Charleston Trust.

The gallery remains open through the summer and will continue its programme of releasing two catalogues of new works a month – an increase on one per month pre-lockdown.



"It has been difficult trying to buy works because the auctions are going so well," says the gallery's Tom Edwards, citing competition from other galleries and private buyers alike. You've got to be positive about it for the sake of the trade, though. It would be worse if nothing was selling."

Since reopening, he adds, visitors have come through the gallery, some of them buying. Sales so far include a large John Piper.

Netsuke nets a white-glove result

Two hundred eagerly awaited examples from Brockhaus collection generate suitable response

by Jonathan Franks

£1 = €1.12/SFr1.18

While many of their colleagues have focused attention in recent years on Chinese works of art, the auctioneers at Lempertz (25% buyer's premium) in Cologne always took care not to neglect art from Japan in the regular sales of Asian art.

On June 27, their efforts were well rewarded. The auction of 200 netsuke from the legendary collection of Albert Brockhaus (1855-1921) was a white-glove sale and the premium-inclusive total of just over €858,000 (£766,000) was over four and a half times the sum of the estimates.

Brockhaus, member of a famous publishing family in Leipzig, started collecting netsuke in 1877. The company was best-known for its encyclopedias and Brockhaus set about amassing a vast collection, which he catalogued with the same attention to detail.

Each piece was documented on an index card, with information on the artist, the material, provenance, date of purchase and often a drawing of the object itself. This card index was the base for Brockhaus's seminal publication Netsuke from 1905 and expanded in 1909, which was the first western work on the subject and still considered one of the best.

Big spender

Brockhaus was a voracious collector. At the 1913 sale of the British collector Walter L Behrens he acquired 383 of the netsuke on offer. After his death in 1921, the collection remained in Leipzig until the end of the Second World War, when it was transferred to West Germany and stayed in the hands of his descendants.

Over the decades, parts of the collection have come under the hammer. In 1980 Christie's held a specialist sale in London; however, the majority of pieces were sold by Cologne auctioneer Trudel Klefisch.

She had trained at Lempertz in the 1960s, before setting up on her own in 1972. Brockhaus netsuke figured prominently at her sales in 1981, 1992, 1997, 2002 and 2008. Some pieces came directly from the family; others had passed through the hands of different collectors, before returning to the market.

1 & 2. Top price in the Lempertz sale of netsuke from the Albert Brockhaus collection was paid for this 2½in (6.5cm) high, mid-18th century Kyoto ivory netsuke of a horse signed Mitsuharu, one of Brockhaus' 19th century purchases and one that was illustrated in his classic book Netsuke, 1905 (also shown). It sold for €80,000 (£71,430).

3. This 3½in (9cm) long, 18th century ivory dragon rose from the guide of €4200-5000 to €18,000 (£16,070).

4. An 18th century boxwood netsuke of a seated greyhound, signed Masakazu, 3in (7cm) high, sold for €28,000 (£25,000), seven times the estimate.

5. Part of the Brockhaus Collection since 1908, this 2in (4.5cm) long wolf devouring a monkey, an early 19th century ivory netsuke, signed Okakoto, changed hands for €8500 (£7590).

6. Brockhaus bought this 2in (5cm) wide 19th century boxwood hare, signed Toyomasa, in 1907. It sold to a Canadian collector for €62,000 (£55,360).

> Brockhaus set about amassing a vast collection, catalogued with the same attention to detail

In 2013 Klefisch closed her auction house and worked freelance as an expert for colleagues. In December last year, she was contacted by two of Brockhaus' great-granddaughters, who each wanted to sell 100 netsuke from the remaining collection. Klefisch was now responsible for handling the sale at Lempertz – as she put it, "this was a fitting way to mark the end of my career".

Even given the fact that the netsuke were fresh to the market and had such an illustrious provenance, the response was overwhelming. Among the international bidders were several from France and the UK, but very few from Japan. The majority of buyers were, however, from Germany.

All were in a generous mood: estimates meant little.

A softwood carving of a standing Kirin, once owned by Walter L Behrens, catalogued as possibly 19th century, went from a €700-900 estimate to €19,000 (£16,965); an 18th century ivory dragon from the same source from a €4200-5000 estimate to €18,000 (£16,070), while a 19th century mythological beast changed hands for €23,000 (£20,535), almost 20 times the low estimate. A boxwood greyhound from the 18th century, also ex-Behrens, was sold for €28,000 (£25,000).

Also of 18th century origin was a maritime ivory group depicting two hares jumping over waves, which rose from a €900-1200 estimate to €26,000 (£23,215), going to a German collector.

There was even more demand for a figure of a leaping hare, a 19th century boxwood carving, signed by Toyomasa.

Bidding started at €8000 and when the bids slowed down in the upper 40s, the auctioneer did his best and nudged the last competitors upwards. "Yes we can," he said when the €50,000-mark was passed. In the event, a Canadian collector won the race at €62,000 (£55,360).

The top price of the day was reserved for a mid-18th century ivory carving of a horse from Kyoto, signed Mitsuharu. Sold to a German collector for €80,000 (£71,430), it had the added kudos of being illustrated in Brockhaus' book from 1905. A copy of the first edition, from a different source, closed the Cologne auction, selling for €2600 (£2320). ■

East Germany nostalgia fuels demand

There is a phenomenon known in Germany as Ostalgie, which is a nostalgic feeling for the now defunct East German state (GDR). This was certainly apparent at the sale of historical memorabilia, not just of German origin, in the extensive sale at the Berliner Auktionshaus für Geschichte (18% buyer's premium) from June 9-13.

Among the distinctive lots on offer was large metal plate painted with the state symbol of the GDR, measuring 2ft 8in (82cm) in diameter and weighing a substantial 73lb (33kg). The symbol was the version adopted in 1955 and in use until reunification with West Germany in 1990.

The colours black, red and gold were central to the national symbols of both states. The hammer was the representation of the factory workers, the backbone of the state, the compass designated the academics and intelligentsia, while the wreath of rye on the outside ring symbolised the farmers.

Earlier versions of the symbol omitted the compass, in accordance with the GDR's definition of itself as a state of workers and farmers.

The auction catalogue could offer no information to the provenance, but an example of this size was probably used to designate an embassy or consulate.

The auction house had priced it at €300; after a short exchange of bids, it was knocked down for €1300 (£1160) to a private buyer from Potsdam.

Far left: Joseph Presents his Father to the Pharaoh by Jan Victors – SFr190,000 (£161,015) at Beurret & Bailly.

Swiss painter admired by van Gogh and now collectors

In a letter to his brother, written in 1883, Vincent van Gogh expressed his admiration for the Swiss painter Albert Anker.

The sentiment is shared by Swiss collectors, one of whom invested a low-estimate SFr1.2m (£1.02m) to secure the top lot at Beurret & Bailly (25/20% buyer's premium) in Basel on June 24.

Anker's large format canvas Die Taufe, the characteristic depiction of a christening, was painted in 1864. It was exhibited in Paris in that year and was subsequently marketed by the famous Paris dealership of Goupil & Cie.

There was a lot more action in the room when the mid-17th century painting Joseph Presents his Father to the Pharaoh came up for sale. The 5ft 4in x 6ft 8in (1.63 x 2.04m) canvas was the work of Jan Victors, who was most probably one of Rembrandt's pupils in the 1630s.

Although conclusive evidence is lacking that this was the case, paintings by Victors certainly reflect the close influence of the great master.

He painted numerous large-format biblical scenes, often focusing on the relationship between father and son, as was also the case with the painting offered in Basel for SFr40,000-60,000. Its provenance could be traced back to 1776, when it belonged to a certain John Hope in Amsterdam. It was offered for sale on behalf of a Swiss company, having been in their collection since the 1930s.

International bidders were on hand and on the phones and pushed the price to SFr190,000 (£161,015) paid by an anonymous buyer.

Meet the Tudors in miniature form

A bidding battle broke out at Kinsky (28% buyer's premium) in Vienna on June 23 for this pair of figures fashioned as King Henry VIII and his daughter Elizabeth I, each about 13in (32cm) high.

They were catalogued as 17th or 18th century in date and wearing contemporary dress, and came with the following provenance: 'purchased from the property of the English princess Margaret 50 years ago in Stuttgart; Austrian private collection'.

Bidding started at €5000 but in the next few minutes the price soared to no less than €210,000 (£187,500), with the hammer falling to an English bidder.

It is possible that the figures are of English origin and were perhaps made as historical models intended for adults, rather than as toys, royal portrait figures such as these being popular subjects from the early 18th century.

Another British buyer secured a 17in (44cm) high silver-gilt and enamelled reliquary in gothic architectural form, which was catalogued as 'German 16th/19th century'.

Part of its attraction was its provenance: in December 1966, it had been sold in Paris as part of the Collection du Baron James de Rothschild. Against a guide of €15,000-25,000 the hammer fell at €40,000 (£35,715).

Another Batoni emerges from the wilderness

Among the most important clients of the 18th century artist Pompeo Batoni was Domenico Orsini, Duke of Gravina, who went on to become Cardinal Domenico Amedeo Orsini d'Arago.

He purchased at least four paintings from Batoni, including an oil painting of John the Baptist in the Wilderness in 1752. Orsini paid by instalments, as can be seen from receipts in the same year preserved in the Archivo Capitolino in Rome which describe 'un San Gio: Battista nel Deserto dipinto in tela' (a John the Baptist in the Desert, painted on canvas).

The appearance of a 3ft 2in x 2ft 5in (96 x 74cm) oil on canvas with this subject, monogramed PB and dated 1752, which came up for sale at Plückbaum (25% buyer's premium) in Bonn in a sale on June 19-20, caused a lot of buzz.

Above: Pompeo Batoni's John the Baptist in the Wilderness – €170,000 (£151,785) at Plückbaum.

It was certainly fresh to the market, having been in a local collection since the 1930s, if not longer. Details of the execution, style and form of the monogram and comparison with other works strongly supported the theory that this was the cardinal's painting. In particular the depiction of the Lamb of God bore a great resemblance to an earlier version of the theme, painted in 1654, and known only from photographs. It belonged to a museum in Dresden and is thought to have been destroyed in the bombing of the city in February 1945.

When he was not working for cardinals, Batoni made his living selling his works to British gentlemen passing through Rome on their Grand Tour.

On auction day, bidding got off to a somewhat sluggish start, but then a handful of international and local bidders drove the price from the guide of €25,000 to an impressive €170,000 (£151,785). The buyer was a British dealer.

Dinet depicts Sahara culture

An oil painting by Alphonse Etienne Dinet from 1897 caused the greatest stir at the June 16 auction at Karl & Faber (25% buyer's premium) in Munich.

Dinet was different to most other Orientalist painters, in that he immersed himself totally in his subject matter; he travelled to North Africa on numerous occasions, learning the languages and the culture of the Sahara.

In later life, he converted to Islam and adopted the name Nasreddine Dinet. In his works he attempted to capture the true essence of Bedouin life and avoid the exoticism that characterised the paintings of many of his colleagues.

This was also apparent in the 18in x 2ft 5in (46 x 73cm) canvas, Joueur de flûte. Environs de Laghouat, in the Munich auction. It had an interesting provenance. In 1900 the legendary Parisian art dealer Paul Durand-Ruel purchased the painting from the artist and sold it on to the Russian collector Pyotr Ivanovich Shchukin. Later it came into the collection of a south German family, where it has been for several decades.

It was expected to bring €40,000-60,000. After the initial flurry of bids, two phone bidders remained in the running until the hammer fell at €200,000 (£178,570). The new owner is a Moroccan collector.

Meissen ewer breezes in

There is absolutely no way that one can describe the decoration of a late 19th century Meissen ewer sold by Wendl (21% buyer's premium) in Rudolstadt in the auction of June 25-27, as restrained.

Applied figures of cherubs, one playing the bagpipes, and the goddess Juno with a peacock at her feet are complemented by depictions of birds and butterflies, all positioned above a relief of clouds.

This is Luft (Air), one of a set of Elements ewers originally designed by Meissen's most talented modeller, Johann Joachim Kaendler, in 1741.

The first ensemble of this type, which included the four elements and a fifth piece with a relief portrait of the French king Louis XV, was intended as a present from Augustus the Strong to the French monarch. Whether he actually received them has not been determined.

The original versions were sparingly painted, some even left white. Not so in the period 1850-1918, when the brightly decorated 2ft 2in (66cm) high vase in the Wendl auction was created.

It could not fail to catch the eye of eight phone bidders who took the price to €13,000 (£11,610), more than three times the catalogue estimate.

Artist found his own way

In his autobiography Georg Schrimpf described how he originally lacked the courage to become a painter and spent several years as a baker, a waiter and a coalman until he finally found the conviction to devote himself exclusively to art.

For the main part self-taught, Schrimpf drew inspiration from the Old Masters, in combination with the avant-garde tendencies he first encountered in Munich in 1909.

In 1935, three years before his untimely death at the age of 48, he painted his 2ft 4in x 21in (70 x 53cm) Mädchen am Fenster (Young Girl at the Window). On the reverse of the frame the painting is also a title Am Morgen (In the Morning).

Above: Mädchen am Fenster (Young Girl at the Window) by Georg Schrimpf – €195,000 (£174,110) at Van Ham.

Having spent the last 70 years in a local collection, it was the surprise hit at Van Ham (29/25% buyer's premium) on June 10.

By this phase, Schrimpf had abandoned any signs of Expressionism, which could be found in his earlier work, devoting himself instead to Neue Sachlichkeit (New Objectivity).

His distinctive style was also influenced by Italian Neoclassical painters such as Carlo Carrà, whose work he encountered during long stays in Italy in the years leading up to the First World War.

flurry of bids pushed the price way past the estimate of €50,000-70,000, with the hammer falling at €195,000 (£174,110). The successful bid came from a collector from Hesse.

Auction Calendar 22 July - 4 August

The original and authoritative listing of UK sales

Every care is taken in compiling this calendar. Due to current market conditions caused by Covid-19, some of the live auctions listed here will be held as live online only sales. Such auctions will take place behind closed doors and are not open to members of the public for bidding in the room.

Bidding takes place online and is also usually available on the phone or on commission. Other auctions listed will be held as live sales whereby some bidders are allowed in the room, subject to national government social distancing and hygiene rules. Bidding will also typically be available online, on the phone and on commission.

In all cases you should check with auction house directly to understand the conditions under which the auction is taking place, including any viewings, storage arrangements or delivery options that are currently available.

Some auction houses are allowing viewings and room bidding by appointment only, so always contact the auction house or check its website before visiting its premises.

Our online calendar is updated throughout the week, check it regularly to ensure you have the latest information.

We are also listing timed auctions that are being held on thesaleroom.com - all bidding on these sales takes place online.

Information accurate at the time of going to press (2pm Friday July 17).

Auctioneers are requested to contact us with details of their sales and inform us of any changes.

Buying at Auction - a general guide
Always read the auctioneer's terms and conditions for full details.

Buyer's Premium:
A charge made by the auctioneer to the buyer as a percentage of the hammer price. This fee is usually subject to VAT.

Purchase price:
The hammer price and buyer's premium plus VAT on the premium.

The buyer should establish the rate of buyer's premium and other add-on costs such as VAT and factor them into prices prior to bidding. Auctioneers may also charge fees such as a minimum lot fee.

Lots consigned from outside the EU may also incur additional charges: look out for symbols denoting this in the cataloguing.

Payment:
Goods will be released only after arrangements for payment have been made. Check beforehand which forms of payment are accepted.

Internet bidding:
Online bidding allows you to follow an auction as it is happening via the internet and bid in real time against those in the room or on the telephone. To participate in this way you need to register your details before the sale just as you would at the auction house.

Typically, the lot being sold will be shown on screen with the level of bidding displayed alongside. For the internet bidder it is then simply a matter of clicking to register a bid.

Storage and insurance:
An auctioneer will usually make it clear how soon after a sale a lot must be collected and what the storage fees might be for any delay.

Buyers who wish to collect purchases some time after the sale might consider taking out insurance for them while they are in storage. Failure to collect within the agreed deadline may lead to purchases being resold by the auctioneer.

Delivery:
If an auctioneer offers delivery, buyers will need to factor in the cost if they do not want to pick up purchases themselves.

If an auctioneer does not offer a delivery service, they will usually be able to refer the buyer to service providers who operate in their area.

Artist's Resale Right

Advertisements in Antiques Trade Gazette may mention Artist's Resale Right (ARR).
Please refer to the information below for details.

Living artists and the descendants of artists deceased within the last 70 years are entitled to receive a resale royalty each time their work is bought. The right applies only when the sale price reaches or exceeds the sterling equivalent of €1,000 and is calculated on a sliding scale.

Please note ARR is calculated in euros.
Auctioneers will apply current exchange rates.

Royalty	Resale price
4%	up to €50,000
3%	between €50,000.01 and €200,000
1%	between €200,000.01 and €350,000
0.5%	between €350,000.01 and €500,000
0.25%	in excess of €500,000

Royalties are also capped so that the total amount of the royalty paid for any single sale of a work cannot exceed €12,500. ARR is exempt of VAT.

Auction formats: some of the live sales listed in this calendar will be held as live online only events whereby there is no bidding in person. Some auction houses may choose to allow a small number of bidders in the room, subject to social distancing, hygiene standards and national government regulations. Check with the auction house for details.

On a stairway to sales heaven

It's not often that an antiques fair is likened to a Led Zep reunion, but bear with us...

by Joan Porter

"The enthusiasm, the anticipation, the overwhelming sense of excitement from everyone... it was just like being at the Led Zeppelin reunion gig at the O2 in 2007," said dealer Henry Nicholls.

Not another comeback for aged rockers this time – his excitement reflected the heady atmosphere at the first Sunbury Antiques Market post-lockdown at Kempton Park Racecourse on Tuesday, July 7.

Nicholls, who owns an antiques shop in West Sussex which he runs with his son Peter (currently on furlough), said: "I couldn't believe the crowds that were already at the gates and more gathering as opening got closer. I've never seen crowds like it at any fair, ever.

"At the off it was like a swarm of locusts descending on a fresh crop field. I'd taken 12 boxes of smalls, around 30 paintings, a jewellery cabinet and some small furniture. By the time I packed up I had three paintings, no furniture and two boxes of smalls left. And the jewellery cabinet took a hammering too. Everyone around me reported outstanding sales."

As an indication of just how much hunger there is out there from both collectors and the trade, Sunbury Antiques director Edward Cruttenden said: "This was probably one of the busiest markets in memory.

"We needed to implement ample room for social distancing and the temporary loss of space at the racecourse meant we lost over two-thirds of our normal trading areas.

"We accommodated inside traders outside for the time being and traders were around the 300 mark with buyers around 2000 throughout the day."

The next Sunbury Antiques Market is on Tuesday, July 28. ■

Redecoration is boosting trade

Stephanie Castell, owner of The Secondhand Warehouse in the Herefordshire town of Leominster, resorted to an extreme measure to make social distancing easier when the centre reopened on June 15: she took a wall out.

Castell said: "We put a one-way system in place and signs as instructed. The counter had a wipe-down surface, hand sanitiser on both doors and by the counter, and our screen arrived in the nick of time.

"I found the reopening nerve-racking. Would anyone come at all, let alone buy anything? We needn't have worried. Customers were very sensible and didn't handle things unnecessarily. Most importantly, they spent money. Trade has continued to be really good with people travelling a fair distance to visit us."

It has been "a very positive start", Castell added. "We are selling across the board but with far more pictures, prints, maps, mirrors and rugs than we normally would. I imagine that is due to people redecorating during lockdown."

With dealer Ben Cooper, she organises the Two Cs Antiques Fairs. "For our Ludlow Racecourse fair, we have some interesting plans in place and are awaiting approval before we can discuss these," said Castell.

What can be announced is the future venue for the Two Cs Worcestershire Antiques Fair, previously held at the 19th century Chateau Impney Hotel near Droitwich, now permanently closed.

The new location is the Bank House Hotel, Bransford, Worcester, with the first fair scheduled for October 24-25. The next Ludlow Racecourse antiques fair is on Saturday and Sunday, September 26-27.

My own collecting odyssey

MADAM – I really enjoyed reading the Collector's Interview in ATG No 2448, which featured the artist Michael Austin.

Before I was halfway through, I'd heard myself saying "I've got one of those" or "I've done that" several times. By the end of the piece I recognised that here was a man, not of the same generation, but after my own heart, with similar attitudes, tastes and objectives, with a good eye, and who loves a bargain.

I believe these trappings are heaven-sent, they are not necessarily inherited, and they remain with us throughout our lives. I am now 80, and I still have them. On the other hand, I recall my mother would never allow what she called "clutter" in the house!

As a young lad, I once went to work in my father's small factory, where he produced cleaning wipers for use in dockyards and on the railways. At the end of the week, my father gave me 10 shillings (50p), which I immediately spent on a Dinky bulldozer, which I still have, in its box. Perhaps that was the start of the disease.

I laughed out loud when Michael mentioned his wife's rolling eyes. My wife's face is a picture when I return home on a Sunday lunchtime from the Devizes weekly antiques market, with yet another old chair. I couldn't risk a table...

Having lived in Saudi Arabia and France for considerable periods of time, we have items from both places. Carpets and bedouin jewellery from the first, and Napoleon III furniture and light fittings from the second.

We, like Michael, have a bit of space, and thankfully a cellar, where the remains of our French brocante are stored.

Sadly, we will have to downsize in the not too distant future – what a wrench that will be. Most of our items have a story to tell, and we shall be sad to lose them.

The nearest thing we have to a pond yacht, (something I have always coveted), is a balsa wood model of a fishermen's boat, which was bought in Madagascar in 1966, while on an RAF detachment. This model is still proudly gathering dust on top of our Chippendale 'style' display cabinet!

Finally, in response to Michael's final paragraph, I have to admit to a shared interest in militaria, and particularly the RAF and RFC.

One item which keeps me interested for hours is a collection of letters from a RFC cadet to his parents, during his training and eventually his operational flying with 10 Sqn at the end of the First World War. I smiled when I read that he asked his parents to purchase a new uniform, and insisted that it be RFC, and not the new-fangled RAF! I was also surprised to see from his envelopes, that as an officer, he was allowed to censor his own letters – does that still apply?

Strength to your elbow Michael, and thank you to Laura Chesters for an uplifting article.

Robin Mitchell

I have drawn a blank

MADAM – I wonder whether your readers can assist with any information regarding this signed watercolour acquired in Norfolk in the late 1980s. To date I have drawn a complete blank on this artist.

'Constable': try the V&A for an opinion

MADAM – Re: Anthony Carter's enquiry about his painting of the Mill Stream and Willy Lott's cottage which he thinks might be by Lionel Bicknell Constable (ATG No 2451), might I suggest he takes the picture to the Victoria and Albert Museum, which reopens on August 6.

Opinions are given the first Tuesday of each month, 2.30-5pm, but because of Covid-19 this should be confirmed directly with the museum.

Although at least five of John Constable's seven children drew or painted, Lionel is the most talented – between 1849-55 he exhibited 13 works at the Royal Academy – but the quality of his work is very mixed.

Given that Lionel's largest known canvases are 14 x 18in (35 x 45cm), it is interesting to note Mr Carter's painting is 19½ x 14in (49 x 35cm).

Leggatt label?

Thanks also to Simon Waters, of Pebworth, Worcestershire, who contacted us to say: "I believe the printed numbers, if I recall correctly, were those used by Leggatt Brothers, a major firm in the 20th century, and who would have dealt in both Lionel and John Constable."

Our thanks to Bennie Gray

MADAM – We have read, with great interest, your reports about the problems encountered by so many antiques dealers since the start of the Covid-19 crisis.

These range from difficulty in getting government grants to issues surrounding furlough and, crucially, the lack of understanding and support from landlords.

These are problems which have affected all kinds of businesses up and down the country, but they have probably hit antiques dealers more than most because of the independent nature of the trade.

Of course, we at Grays have also been confronted with challenges and have suffered from the fallout of the pandemic. So far we have survived its onslaught partly thanks to the understanding and support of Bennie Gray, who has allowed us to remain free of charge throughout April, May and June and, more recently, now we have reopened, an ongoing discount of 66% on our monthly licence fees.

He has ensured his staff were in contact with us weekly throughout lockdown to check on our well-being. They also gave us the latest information regarding government initiatives which we may have missed.

Thanks to these efforts, which helped us all survive the last few difficult months, we have positive thoughts for the future. After all, we are a commercially fertile working community of 80 small businesses with an established global customer base going back more than 40 years.

Also, the spacious Grays building lends itself to safety measures more than most – especially social distancing which is already proving itself to be very important to our more vulnerable and elderly customers.

We write this letter simply to point out important distinctions beween Grays and some other clusters of antiques dealers and to publicly thank Bennie for his considerate understanding as to how the lockdown would affect us.
